TVA, Willkie Agree on 78 Million for Power Plants

Agency to Get All Commonwealth and Southern's Electric Assets in Tennessee

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—An eventful chapter in the long and bitter feud between the New Deal and one of the Nation's leading utilities was brought to a dramatic end today with announcement of an amicable arrangement under which TVA will purchase all electrical properties of Commonwealth & Southern Corporation in Tennessee.

Agreement was announced at Knoxville, Tenn., by TVA officials and in New York by Wendel L. Willkie, president of Commonwealth & Southern.

The TVA agreed to pay $78,600,000 for the rival electric properties of Tennessee Electric Power Co., a subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern.

Wall street sources said this figure was only slightly under Willkie's asking price.

The TVA had first offered only $55,000,000 for the properties.

Say U. S. Capitulated

Local utility executives in other systems said the end of the six-year Willkie-TVA feud was made possible by major concessions on the part of negotiators representing the Federal Administration.

These include:

Recognition for the first time of "equity" or common stock value in utility systems.

Recognition of "going business" value in utility financial structures, also for the first time.

Recognition of investments not strictly for purchase of operating property, another precedent.

The utility receives under the arrangement approximately $8,000,000 in cash in return for the common stock of Tennessee Electric Power, all of which is owned by Commonwealth and Southern.

In addition, the company receives something under $3,000,000 in other assets applicable to the common, which have a book value of $17,000,000.

Ignored in the Past

Heretofore, New Deal utility administrators have refused to recognize common stock or equity values in similar transactions.

Under the agreement, preferred stockholders also will be paid par for their holdings.

Commonwealth & Southern Corporation owns about $7,000,000 in bonds and about $750,000 in preferred stock, which it invested in Tennessee Electric Power, and will receive back the full book value of its investment.

As soon as technical details of the present arrangement have been worked out, including TVA's allocation of purchased properties to municipalities in its area, Willkie and TVA negotiators will try to work out a similar agreement covering Commonwealth & Southern's electric properties in northern Alabama and Mississippi.

Utility executives consider this impending negotiation of even greater general importance since it is understood that Willkie will

Army Develops Nonsickening Typhoid Shots

A new vaccine method which gives immunity to typhoid fever without the reaction which usually follows a prophylaxis has been developed at the Army Medical Laboratory here.

The Army's surgeon general, Charles R. Reynolds, described the new method to The Post yesterday and revealed that while it has proved successful in experiments over the past four years, the Army plans to determine the exact duration of the immunity from the disease by further tests with the cadets at West Point.

Use of the West Pointers as "guinea pigs" was ordered, it was said, in order that continuous data would be available. By starting the tests with the class that entered the Military Academy last June, and measuring periodically their degree of immunity, it will be possible to adapt the method for practical use, Gen. Reynolds stated.

The new method involves injecting minute doses of the vaccine into the layers of the skin to revive the immunity resulting from the initial inoculation.

Italian Aides Rotten-Egged In Panama

Car of Envoy, Admiral Spattered on Visit to President Arosmena

By the Associated Press.

Panama City, Panama, Feb. 4.—Anti-Italian demonstrators today pelted with eggs and vegetables an automobile bearing the Italian minister and an Italian admiral and aides on an official visit to President Dr. Juan Demostenes Arosmena.

The car was badly spattered and so much refuse flew in before the window could be closed the party had to return to the admiral's visiting flagship to change clothes before carrying out the call.

The disturbance occurred about noon as the automobile carrying Minister Italo Capanni and Admiral Eduardo Somigli passed Santa Ana Plaza on the way to the presidential palace. It lasted between 15 and 20 minutes.

Somigli is commander of the Italian seventh naval division, consisting of the cruisers Eugenio di Savoia and Emanuele Filberto Duca D'Aosta, on a world cruise to demonstrate Italian naval strength.

Police reinforcements arrived shortly after the disturbance started and began gathering in the participants. Originally the demonstrators were a small group numbering between 30 and 50 but increased as store and office workers left their jobs for lunch.

As fast as the disturbers could be arrested and arraigned they were sentenced each to 10 days in jail

Yesterday the Anti-Fascist League petitioned Mayor C. M. Ossa for permission to hold a demonstration. The mayor refused.

Slayer Refuses Pardon to Die On Guillotine

Rennes, France, Feb. 4 (AP).—A convicted murderer who spurned a chance to live was beheaded on the guillotine today by France's nervous new high executioner.

The prisoner was Maurice Pelorge, who was entitled by tradition to a pardon as the first convict in line to be executed by the new "Monsieur de Paris."

Eighty-year-old Leopold Desfourneaux was the executioner, at least temporary successor to the hereditary position of Anatole Deibler, who died unexpectedly Thursday.

Critics complained that Desfourneaux did not let the blade drop fast enough. Desfourneaux took 10 or 15 seconds—time enough for the victim to turn his head and see the blade falling.

French Hear Loyalists Seek Peace

Report Indicates Britain Is Asked to Negotiate Pact

By the Associated Press.

Perpignan, France, Feb. 4.—The Spanish government was reported in reliable quarters tonight to have requested Great Britain to open secret negotiations with insurgents to end the 2½-year-old civil war.

The reported overtures contained such broad qualifications, however, as to raise the question of their success.

(A spokesman of the Spanish government embassy in London tonight acknowledged the plight of the government was such in Catalonia that an attempt might be made to transfer the capital to Valencia, but denied any attempt to treat for peace had been made through Great Britain.)

The negotiations were disclosed at a time when Premier Juan Negrin's government took first steps toward abandoning all of Catalonia—Spain's northeastern corner—to Insurgent Gen. Franco's conquering forces in an attempt to make a last stand in the central "island" quarter of Spain, embracing Valencia and Madrid.

It was understood that in the request to the British government, the Spanish government authorities stipulated the peace talks be opened with three points enunciated by Negrin Wednesday as the background.

Then Negrin told the Cortes (Parliament) at Figueras the government's aims were:

A guarantee of independence for Spain and freedom from foreign influence;

A government desired by the people, as shown by plebiscite;

Liquidation of the war without persecution to permit all Spaniards to join in the country's reconstruction.

There was no indication at Burgos of Franco's reaction to the Spanish government's move. Some diplomats believed the insurgent

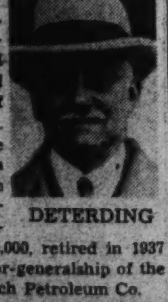
Army Recalls Berlin Attache

The War Department yesterday ordered home its military attache to Germany, Col. Truman Smith, effective March 1. Officials said the move had no international significance and that a relief will be assigned to the Berlin post next summer. Maj. Percy G. Black will act as attache until a new appointment is made.

Sir Henri Deterding Dies at 72; Was 'Rockefeller of Europe'

By the Associated Press.

St. Moritz, Switzerland, Feb. 4.—Sir Henri Deterding, who rose from poverty to become one of the richest and most powerful of the world's industrialists, died today at his villa here.



DETERDING

The Netherlands-born oil magnate and "Rockefeller of Europe" was 72.

Sir Henri, the possessor of a personal fortune estimated at between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000, retired in 1937 from the director-generalship of the huge Royal Dutch Petroleum Co.

He was the guiding genius in the development of the far-flung firm which at the time of his retirement embraced a group of 200 companies with 40,000 employes.

Sir Henri was a frequent winter visitor to St. Moritz because he enjoyed ice-skating with members of his family.

He was slightly indisposed today and a doctor was called to his villa.

"There is nothing much the matter with me," he laughingly remarked.

The doctor was leaving the villa grounds when Sir Henri suffered a heart seizure.

His wife ran down the driveway shouting "Doctor, doctor, come back!"

Before the doctor could reach Sir Henri's bedroom the world-famed oil magnate was dead.

Parliament Is Closed by Bomb Scare

Commons and Bank Of England Targets Of Terrorists, 'Dispatch' Reports

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 4.—The houses of Parliament were closed to the public today for the first time since the World War as a precaution while Britain sought to suppress the wave of terrorism attributed to the outlawed Irish Republican army.

The Sunday Dispatch reported raids on Irish Republican army houses in Belfast resulted in discovery of plans to blow up Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle, the House of Commons and the Bank of England.

The newspaper's report, which lacked official confirmation, said the raids also uncovered details of a plot to assassinate British politicians and high police officials.

Search Intensified

The seized documents were flown immediately to London, the Sunday Dispatch said, and officials of the British Home Office and Scotland Yard conferred on protective measures.

Authorities intensified their search for hidden supplies of explosives and investigated illegal purchases of chemicals believed to have been used in the bombings.

They instituted a thorough checkup of stores in establishments ranging from large government plants to small fireworks factories. Police systematically combed Irish sections of London.

Passengers Watched

Officials in Belfast kept well-known members of the Irish Republican army under close observation and inspected arriving and departing passengers.

The governments of Great Britain, Ireland and northern Ireland were co-operating closely in a large scale campaign to stamp out the bombings which began January 16 with a series of eight in England and northern Ireland.

Intensified action followed explosions yesterday in two of London's subway centers in which 12 persons were injured.

Two incidents today, one in Torquay on England's south coast and one in Slough, sent Scotland Yard experts rushing out of London in the belief that the terrorists had struck again.

Conservative Club Wrecked

An explosion wrecked the headquarters of the Torquay Conservative Club in Devonshire, but the first conclusion that it had been caused by a bomb was succeeded by a belief that it was due to accidental ignition of gas.

An early morning fire in an airplane parts factory at Slough was punctuated by a series of explosions which Scotland Yard men finally de-

Boarder Slays 3, Barricades Self; Killed in Siege

Binghamton, N. Y., Feb. 4 (AP).—Paul Charkowski, 40, returned today to the apartment of Mrs. Sophia Vesneski where he had boarded, and fired several shots at the woman's daughter, Irene, 14, who fled screaming. Patrolman Weslar, off duty, ran to investigate and fell dead from a volley fired by Charkowski, one of whose bullets also killed John A. Griffin, a bystander.

Mayor Charles Kress led a detachment of police and firemen against Charkowski, who barricaded himself in the flat. After a 25-minute siege in which the firemen laid down a tear gas barrage, Kress and two policemen forced an entrance and found the man dead

Earthquake Jolts Los Angeles Area

Los Angeles, Feb. 4 (AP).—An earthquake shook portions of the Los Angeles area this afternoon.

There were no reports of damage. At the Carnegie Institution Seismological Laboratory, Pasadena, experts estimated the shock centered about 15 miles from the laboratory. They said it was too slight to have caused damage.

1,000 Chinese Casualties In Japanese Bombing

Chungking, Feb. 4 (U.P.).—Official Chinese reports said today Japanese bombing planes had taken more than 1,000 casualties and "almost entirely destroyed" the city of Wanhsien, in eastern Szechuan province.

Reliable quarters here predicted that a private American corporation would make a loan of $15,000,000 to China within a week for the purchase of American goods. They said a similar British loan was planned.

Allies Order Hundreds of U. S. Planes

French Report 700 To 1,000 More Craft Wanted; British Add 250 to Purchase

Two developments abroad yesterday added fuel to the controversy over President Roosevelt's alleged assistance in rearming of France and Great Britain.

It was reported in Paris that the French government had instructed its military mission here to place an order for "an absolutely sensational number" of military planes, said to be between 700 and 1,000.

The British air ministry announced in London it had increased by more than 60 per cent its orders for planes here, to a new total of 650.

200 Ordered Earlier

The French order would be in addition to two previous ones for 100 planes each, all of which will have been delivered by June 1.

A special cable to The Post last night reported that the aviation correspondent of the Paris newspaper L'Intransigeant, revealing the supposed new French order, had written: "When the details are published, they will create a sensation and deeply impress the Rome-Berlin axis."

If the new French order should materialize for 1,000 planes, it would raise the total of British and French orders here to 1,850.

16 Planes at Le Havre

At Le Havre the French steamer Champlain docked yesterday with 16 American airplanes ordered by the French air ministry.

The British announcement said that 250 instead of 200 Lockheed reconnaissance planes and 400 instead of 200 North American trainers had been ordered "in view of improved deliveries in prospect under orders for aircraft placed in the United States last year." The total cost will jump from $35,000,000 to $48,000,000.

Agree It's Legal

All members of Congress are agreed that sale of planes or other war implements to England and France is legal—but controversy has flared ever since it was revealed that a French Air Ministry official had been permitted to inspect a plane, built to army specifications, which a private manufacturer was offering for sale to the United States Government.

Meanwhile, one of the Senate's leading isolationists, Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, added his voice to that of Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, in demanding that the President release members of the Senate Military Affairs Committee from the pledge of secrecy they took at a White House conference last week. President Roosevelt has characterized as "a deliberate lie" a report

P St. Bus Drivers, Fearing Holdups, Eliminate Stops

Alarmed by the recent holdup and wounding of George E. Warder, bus operator and the son of Detective Sergt. Charles Warder, drivers on the P street northwest line have refrained from stopping for passengers north of Florida avenue on the Fourth street spur.

Riley E. Elgen, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, said yesterday he considered it "a matter for police." It was suggested the terminal at Fifth and W street northwest be moved to a more traveled location.

The route will continue to be operated, Edward D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co., said last night.

San Quentin Prison, Calif., Feb. 4 (U.P.).—All of the 5,266 convicts in San Quentin, the Nation's largest prison, ate three square meals today after the last holdouts of a three-day hunger strike ended their protest against "monotonous menus."

On Wednesday approximately 4,000 prisoners refused prison meals and went on a bread and water diet.

Two Missing Girls Return to Their Homes

Missing from their homes since Friday afternoon, two 14-year-old girls were reported safe at home early this morning.

The girls, Marilyn Coleen Stine, of 916 M street northwest, and Doris Barrett, of 2318 Sixth street northeast, returned last night, Mrs. Stine said. They told Mrs. Stine they were worried about report cards, and decided to stay away from their homes Friday night.

City Council, Manager Recommended for D.C. In Griffenhagen Report

Highlights of Proposed Change

Major recommendations in Griffenhagen report for reorganization of the District government are:

Replacement of the Board of Commissioners by governing body, similar to a city council, of five to seven members on part-time pay and an administrative officer.

Delegation of minor legislative powers to the council, whose duties would be policy-making without executive authority.

Consolidation of 65 District agencies into 17 departments directly under the administrative officer.

Abolition of independent boards, such as Board of Education, and replacement by advisory committees.

Merger of all public recreational activities under single department.

Submission of District budget directly to Congress rather than via the Budget Bureau.

Stabilization of the Federal payment to the District and a contractural exchange of services between District and Federal governments.

17 Departments Urged to Do Work Of Present 65 Agencies

By James D. Secrest.

A modernized municipal government, which would substitute a city council-manager administration for the present board of commissioners, was recommended to the Senate and House District Committees yesterday by E O. Griffenhagen & Associates, Chicago governmental experts.

Complete reorganization of the District government, with 17 new departments directly responsible to a single administrative officer, who in turn would be subordinate to a council-like "governing body," is recommended in the report.

The new set-up would consolidate under this administration 65 heterogenous District agencies and would absorb many of the duties now performed by quasi-judicial bodies. At the same time it would give District authorities more extensive legislative and policy-making powers than they now exercise.

Legislative Powers

Minor legislative powers, now held solely by Congress, are proposed for the "governing body," which would function most efficiently, Griffenhagen suggests, with from five to seven members on a part-time, modest-pay basis.

The door is left open in the recommendation for retention of the present commissioners as members of the council; but, if retained, they would be shorn of their administrative duties and their $9,000-a-year salaries.

While carefully avoiding the local suffrage issue, Griffenhagen points out that the council members may be selected either by appointment of the President or other methods.

7 Months' Work

The report, which is the work of seven months, sharply divides the administrative and policy-making functions of the District government, now merged under the board of commissioners.

While shying away from the designation of "city manager," the report suggests an "administrative officer," whose duties would be similar to those of such a municipal officer. No salary is mentioned, but Griffenhagen comments that it should be "at least as large as that of any major branch of the Federal Government." The highest comparable Federal salary is $15,000, which is the pay of Cabinet officers.

The title "District administrator" is suggested in the report, with "District executive" as second choice.

Nonpolitical Post

The administrator presumably would be a nonpolitical appointee, named either by the President upon recommendation of the council or by the council itself. His term of office would be unlimited, dependent upon his efficiency.

Griffenhagen suggets that the administrator should appoint the heads of the 17 departments to serve during efficient service. While responsible for carrying out the poli-

Judge Called Back to U. S. For Inquiry

Thomas Subpenaed To Testify in Manton, Coster Cases

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—A radiogram went out from the Department of Justice today to Federal Judge Edwin S. Thomas, of Connecticut, South America-bound on the Grace liner Santa Barbara, ordering his "immediate return" to the United States for questioning before two Federal grand juries.

Judge Thomas sailed yesterday and missed the serving of a subpena issued by U. S. Attorney Gregory Noonan. Noonan wirelessed the master of the vessel and requested the jurist to disembark with the pilot. Nearly 3 hours later he received a reply that the judge was continuing his journey.

Noonan said Judge Thomas was wanted for questioning in connection with the investigation of the business affairs of U. S. Circuit Judge Martin T. Manton, whose resignation is effective Monday, and the inquiry into the situation precipitated by the unmasking and subsequent suicide of F. Donald Coster-Musica, head of the McKesson & Robbins drug firm.

By radiogram Brien McMahon, Assistant Attorney General, advised the judge, who has been on the Connecticut bench for 25 years, that the investigation is "very important to the administration of justice and to you personally. I insist on your immediate return from the first port of call."

At the same time Noonan sent a subpena to Federal authorities at Cristobal, Canal Zone, to serve on the judge when he touches his first port of call. Noonan said he failed to serve the judge with the subpena before the ship sailed.

Judge Thomas wirelessed the Associated Press he would return from Cristobal on the first available

Scholars Study Hyde Park Library Fund

Building to Be Property Of U. S. at His Death, Roosevelt Reveals

President Roosevelt attended a dinner in the Hotel Carlton last night given by trustees of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, Inc., and listened to historians, archivists, scholars and members of his Administration discuss plans for creating from his personal records one of the most important historical archives on the contemporary history of the United States to exist anywhere.

Arising from his offer to the Nation on December 10, of his personal papers as President, together with records going back still further, and including other important historical collections, to be housed in a special building on the Roosevelt estate at Hyde Park, plans for carrying out the project, have enlisted widespread support and enthusiasm among scholars. This enthusiasm was demonstrated afresh last night.

Additional enthusiasm was aroused by announcement that President Roosevelt has provided that at his death the entire family estate at Hyde Park, on which the library will be, is to revert to the Government. In the meantime, the building that will hold the Roosevelt archives is to be built from private funds, and with the material vested in the Government is to be intrusted for physical upkeep to the National Park Service. It is intended that the

2 Planes Collide At College Park; 3 Fliers Escape

Three men escaped uninjured when two airplanes locked wings and crashed at College Park Airport yesterday. One plane was demolished.

Airport attendants said one ship was piloted by John McNorton, formerly of the Bureau of Air Commerce, and the other carried A. F. Kamftra and Charles Rexode, both of Washington. They said both pilots were gliding upwind to land, neither apparently aware of the other.

About 10 feet from the ground, their wings touched and both dropped out of control. All three men clambered from the wreckage unhurt.

Aid Rushed to 25,000 Homeless In Areas Ravaged by Floods

State and emergency relief agencies today were rushing aid for nearly 25,000 homeless flood victims, as turbulent streams and rivers roaring down hillsides inundated portions of the Ohio River valley.

Floods, winds, and freezing temperatures combined with rains and snow to take more than a score of lives throughout the Nation.

Red Cross headquarters here last night estimated that more than 5,000 families—approximately 25,000 persons—were forced to evacuate their homes by rampaging waters in Ohio, West Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky.

Food and clothing were being rushed to stricken areas, and field workers were making arrangements to house refugees. Some health authorities in the area called for typhoid inoculations.

Cold weather, however, although adding to the discomfort of the homeless, was believed to have halted a possible flood catastrophe like that of 1937, which took a tremendous toll in lives and property. Crests higher than flood level were foreseen at several large cities along the river during the week, but flood works will be able to protect the surrounding communities, experts said.

The Potomac was steadily rising and was due to overflow at three points today or tonight, but Weather Bureau officials expected damage to be slight.

Near flood stage from Hancock, Md., and Riverton, Va., down to the mouth, the Potomac was to rise 1 foot above the 18-foot level at Harpers Ferry this morning, and GILT OFF THE DOME: Some of the movie stars who visited the Capital last week thought personable Franklin Roosevelt, jr., would be a cinch for a successful movie career—as an actor, not as an executive like his brother Jim.

Mr. Corcoran

But young Roosevelt asserted that he doesn't photograph well and, anyhow, he's wedded to the law.

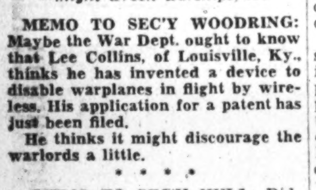
JOB TIP: One of the best new jobs recently offered under the civil service is a $5,600 post as "principal information representative" in Elmer Andrews' Wages & Hours office. He must be under 60, with seven years' experience comparable to a managing editor's.

It's a good spot for a man who'd earn $10,000 to $25,000 in private life, to judge by the qualifications.

* * * *

ASIDE TO BILL DOUGLAS OF SEC: Maybe you've made the industrialists self-conscious. A Washingtonian who recently sold ten shares of General Motors got a letter from Alfred Sloan, jr., asking him why.

He assured Mr. Sloan it was no reflection; he merely needed the money.



"—might wreck warships, too"

MEMO TO SEC'Y WOODRING: Maybe the War Dept. ought to know that Lee Collins, of Louisville, Ky., thinks he has invented a device to disable warplanes in flight by wireless. His application for a patent has just been filed.

He thinks it might discourage the warlords a little.

* * * *

MEMO TO SEC'Y HULL: Did the State Dept. put that Diplomatic School out near the Belgian Embassy up to offering courses in diplomacy to Washington newspapermen?

Some of 'em regarded it as a taunt, others as a dirty dig.

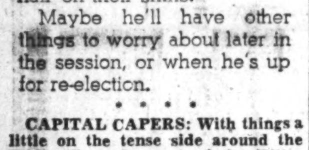
MEMO TO GOV'T GIRLS: A fastidious lawmaker from Dixie threatens to introduce a bill requiring all girls on the U. S. pay roll either to wear wool stockings or clip the hair on their shins.

Maybe he'll have other things to worry about later in the session, or when he's up for re-election.

* * * *

CAPITAL CAPERS: With things a little on the tense side around the White House because of the Hitler threat, the Amlie appointment, the relief vote and the French airplane deal, to ease the atmosphere President Roosevelt opened a press conference by reading (off the record) a list of comic predictions made at a White House party.

He got four big laughs.



"—It might wreck cities, also"

There seem to be dozens of inventors around the country who think they have actually stumbled on just the gadget to swat airplane bombers. . . .

One chap in Texas writes that he has it fairly well worked out, but that it could be used to destroy battleships and cities, as well, and, anyhow, it might fall into evil hands . . .

So he's just holding it back a while.

CAPITAL DICTOGRAPH: Tom Dewey as Manhattan's prosecutor is grabbing so much limelight that he is a thorn in the New Deal's side. He is building himself up so well that New Dealers think he is the No. 1 GOP Presidential hope for 1940, and that even as a candidate for Vice President he would help the ticket enormously.

President Roosevelt's smart young men have tried to cope with young Tom by jumping into airplanes and flying to New York when scandal breaks in New York with a chance for the Federals to cut in, but they can't get there quickly enough.

* * * *

The only solution seems to be to appoint an alert young Federal District Attorney to grab the gravy from Tom's outstretched hands . . . What a scrap it would be if young Tommy Corcoran, for example, were on that spot. Corcoran vs. Dewey!

Cuts in WPA Rolls Slated After April 1

Harrington Pledges Divorce of Politics From Lists in Future

By the United Press.

Works Progress Administrator Francis C. Harrington announced last night that reductions in relief rolls will become necessary after April 1 under the new $725,000,000 WPA appropriation.

Harrington, in his first speech as WPA administrator, said that until April 1, WPA rolls will be maintained at close to their present level of 3,000,000 persons. Barring supplemental appropriations, he said, WPA will have to be cut severely two months hence.

The relief appropriation, cut $150,000,000 under President Roosevelt's request, now is on Mr. Roosevelt's desk awaiting signature.

Harrington, in a nationally broadcast speech, promised that WPA henceforth will be completely divorced from politics and served notice that so-called "white collar" projects will be continued.

Coercion Forbidden

"I am well aware that 3,000,000 WPA workers and their families—perhaps 12,000,000 persons in all—are very anxious to learn just what the deficiency appropriation means in terms of jobs," he said.

"Congress has adopted a provision which for the time being will prevent any severe reduction in the WPA rolls. This provision specifies that during the months of February and March, administrative reductions of the WPA rolls shall not exceed 5 per cent of the total now employed. After April 1, however, the amount of money remaining, if not supplemented, will require very drastic curtailment of the program."

Harrington said he was glad Congress inserted a stipulation in the deficiency bill prohibiting political coercion of WPA workers.

"These provisions," Harrington said, "make it a felony for anyone, inside or outside the WPA to promise any job or benefit in this program, or to deprive or threaten to deprive anyone of employment or benefit in this program for political reasons, or to solicit campaign contributions from anyone paid from these funds.

"These conditions are particularly welcome to me, for I watched first-hand the remarkable fight which Harry Hopkins made for years to keep politics out of this program. I know he did everything within his power, and I am happy that Congress has strengthened my own hand with this new law."

He disclosed that the WPA is perfecting machinery for a wholesale investigation of WPA rolls, to weed out relief workers who are not in actual need. The inquiry was ordered by Congress.

Provision will be made, Harrington said, to continue "white-collar projects within the limits of our funds."

"* * * Such workers," Harrington promised, "equally with all other needy unemployed workers, will be given as far as possible an opportunity to earn a security wage in employment on public projects."

"The right of jobless men and women to public employment is a right which is just being established in America," he declared. "For its preservation as an element of future public policy, I want to urge that it is now and henceforth up to every WPA worker to put in a good day's work for his day's pay—just as good a day's work as he can, whatever his rate of pay may be."

Radio Commentator Asks Press Galleries Pass

Fulton Lewis, jr., Washington news commentator for the Mutual Broadcasting System, appealed to the Senate and House Rules Committees yesterday to admit radio representatives to the Capitol press galleries.

The standing committee of correspondents, self-governing body of the galleries, had rejected Lewis' application on the grounds the rules of eligibility limit membership to "representatives of newspapers and newspaper associaitons."

Plans Completed for Card Parties to Raise Funds for Children's Hospital Blood 'Bank'

District bridge leaders met yesterday to plan a city-wide St. Valentine's party to benefit the Children's Hospital blood and serum "bank" fund. Among them were, reading from left, M. E. Myers, president, Federal Bridge League; Mrs. Winslow B. Van Devanter, chairman of the St. Valentine's Day Parties Ladies' Committee; Mrs. Edward B. Swanson, president of the Washington Bridge League, and James H. Lemon, president of the American Contract Bridge League

James H. Lemon, of Washington, president of the American Contract Bridge League, announced yesterday at a meeting of bridge leaders here than plans had been completed for St. Valentine's Day card parties, for the benefit of worthy children's charities, in more than 450 cities and towns throughout the country.

"But nowhere," said Lemon, "have I heard of plans as extensive or as enthusiastically received as those for the parties to be held here in Washington. It looks as though the Nation's Capital, as it should, is going to show the rest of the country the way."

Under the national sponsorship of the American Contract Bridge League here and in other cities, the parties in Washington are being held under the joint sponsorship of The Washington Post and Station WJSV.

Players—meeting for an afternoon or an evening of bridge, pinochle, parcheesi, chess or any other game they may choose—will purchase tickets at $1 each. Proceeds, with not one penny deducted for expenses of any kind, will go for the establishment of a permanent blood and serum "bank" at Children's Hospital.

Many Lives Saved.

Within the past few years, such "banks" have operated in other cities with spectacular results in saved lives, speedier cures, improved health. In the hospital fortunate enough to have a well stocked and ably administered "bank," there can be no fatal delay when a transfusion of a particular type is urgently necessary. And the life-restoring serums for such major diseases as pneumonia and diphtheria, streptococcus and tetanus infections are always ready at hand.

Washington's Children's Hospital needs such a "bank" and—with no funds available for its immediate and complete establishment—the city-wide St. Valentine's Day parties offer everyone an opportunity to take a part, as pleasant as well as a generous part, in supplying this real community need.

Plans for Washington's party have been under way since the formation, within the past two weeks, of a ladies' committee of 130 members, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Winslow B. Van Devanter.

Enthusiastic Support

"In no instance," said Mrs. Van Devanter yesterday, "have members of our committee reported that they have met with anything but immediate enthusiasm for the idea. Of course, it couldn't be otherwise when it is realized that a table of four—at bridge, or whist, or any other game on St. Valentine's Day or during that week — contribute $4 and that $4 may save a child's life during the coming year."

Mrs. Edward B. Swanson, president of the Washington Bridge League, announced that plans had been completed for a large party under the auspices of that organization to be held at the Shoreham Hotel, Wednesday evening, February 15. As many as 80 tables of four can be accommodated and arrangements have been made to take care of any overflow beyond that number.

Miles E. Myers, president of the Federal Bridge League, reported that his organization's party in the Dragon Room of the Wardman Park Hotel, evening of February 14, was expected to be a complete sell-out.

Urges Many Small Parties

Lemon expressed the hope that party activities would not be restricted to the larger club, hotel and apartment house games.

"I hope," he said, "that hundreds of small parties of one, two and three tables will be organized in private homes throughout the city. And I shouldn't be at all surprised at the end of St. Valentine's week to find that more dollars have been contributed to the fund in this way than through the larger affairs."

Tickets for such parties in blocks of four, eight, twelve and up, may be obtained at the counter on the first floor of The Post Building, 1337 E street northwest. The tickets are large red hearts, with space for each guest's name. Mail orders, addressed to The Post—with check or money order made out to "Children's Hospital 'Bank' Fund"—will be filled immediately.

Have a heart! Take a hand! Make plans today for a party, large or small, in your own home on or near St. Valentine's Day.

TVA and Willkie Agree on $78,600,000 Price for Electric Properties in Tennessee

demark the extent of TVA's future operations.

Willkie said he believes this to be the first step in a new understanding which he hopes will end further expansion of Government competition with private business.

Willkie predicted that privately owned utilities in the United States would spend not less than $1,000,000,000 a year in new capital outlay each year for the next three or four ears if the Administration went a few steps further and:

Made a definite pledge not to "compete with private business in the utility field" in any new areas.

Took steps to prevent further PWA loans to States or municipalities for non-Federal "competition" of this nature.

"Clarified" policies under the public utilities holding company act of 1935.

Ceased "continued attacks" against the utilities.

A utilities expansion program of that magnitude represents more than a 100 per cent increase of the most recent predictions of experts in the utility field for 1939 outlays.

Economists and financiers generally have forecast in recent months that a utility expansion program of $1,000,000,000 a year would be a major factor in stimulating production in heavy industries. The heavy industries' lag in the last year and a half has been signaled out as a contributing factor to the recent recession.

Although all of the common stock in Tennessee Electric Power was owned by Commonwealth & Southern, a large number of private investors held bonds or preferred stock of the company. Under the arrangement, Willkie's company will pay off these investors at 100 cents on the dollar in the course of liquidation of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

The Knoxville announcement was made after a meeting today at the Norris, Tenn., home of Director David Lilienthal.

Major cities expected to be affected immediately are Nashville and Chattanooga.

The announcement said the price agreed upon, plus accounts payable, cash and other considerations, would yield the Tennessee Electric Power approximately $80,000,000 for its electric properties.

Representatives of the TVA, municipalities and utility executives will meet soon to draft formal contracts and final agreements which will be submitted to State and Federal agencies for such proceedings as may be required by statute.

In addition to the participation of Nashville and Chattanooga, which already have sought TVA power, any other city served by the T. E. P. and desiring to acquire its own system to distribute TVA power may do so.

It was announced that the bulk of T. E. P. Co. employes would be taken over by the respective purchasing agencies to operate the publicly owned systems.

In attendance at the meeting at Norris today were Lilienthal, who is power director for the New Deal agency; James Pope, former Senator and recently appointed chairman of the board; Director H. A. Morgan and other TVA officials, including General Manager John Blandford and Counsel James Lawrence Fly.

Has Gone to Supreme Court

The TVA-utilities controversy has been a source of litigation, going several times as far as the United States Supreme Court, for the best part of six years.

The final stage of the negotiations which culminated in today's agreement began last May 18 with an exchange of letters between Willkie and Davil Lilienthal, power director of the TVA.

Pensions at 60 Called Cure for Unemployment

House Group Told 2% Gross Income Tax Would Finance Plan

By the Associated Press.

The House Ways and Means Committee heard the General Welfare Federation's plan for $30 to $60 pensions for the aged extolled yesterday as a means of eliminating all unemployment.

Arthur L. Johnson, executive secretary of the federation and formerly an official of the rival Townsend old age pension organization, told the committee, too, that it would not cost the Government a cent.

The plan proposes that pensions be financed by a 2 per cent gross income tax. Johnson said this would permit giving every one more than 60 years of age a pension, estimating at the same time that the annual cost would range from $2,880,000,000 to $7,200,000,000, depending on the number of beneficiaries and size of the pensions.

Representative Cooper (Democrat), Tennessee, commented that the figuring was "haywire," but that by Johnson's own figures the Federal tax burden would be doubled.

"On the contrary," said Johnson, "it won't cost the Federal Government a cent. This system carries its own freight."

"But it comes out of the pockets of the people," insisted Cooper.

Townsend Attacked

Dr. Francis E. Townsend, founder of the pension movement bearing his name, was at the hearing and heard Johnson accuse him of "using the nickles and dimes of the poor' to fight President Roosevelt's Supreme Court plans instead of for revision of the old-age pension laws.

Representative Reed (Republican), New York, denounced as "absolutely cruel" what he said was the practice of some pension plan advocates of telling their followers they intended to get specific pension bills adopted at this session of Congress.

Police Check Damaged Cars For Boy's Killer

Broken Headlights Examined in Search For Hit-Run Autoist

One of the greatest man hunts ever seen in the city was still in progress last night as police assigned every available man to track down the hit-and-run killer of Millard F. Caldwell, 3d, 12-year-old son of Representative Caldwell of Florida, who was struck down Friday morning at Connecticut avenue and Woodley place northwest.

Spurred by rewards totaling $200 offered by Police Chief Ernest W. Brown and Radio Announcer Arthur Godfrey, civilians kept the headquarters switchboard clogged with calls and kept members of the homicide squad chasing to all corners of the city running down tips.

More than a dozen suspects driving cars with damaged fronts were questioned during the day, Lieut. George Darnell, head of the homicide squad, said, but none was held. About 40 automobiles were minutely examined for traces of the triangular piece of leather ripped from Millard's jacket at the time of the accident.

All cars with only one light showing were stopped last night and the night before as police checked to see if the lens had been broken in a crash. However, no glass was found at the scene of the crime and they are not hopeful of tracing the killer by that method.

Meanwhile, Representative James Seccombe, of Ohio, a member of the District Committee, said that he would ask the committee Wednesday morning to post an additional $1,000 reward for the driver. He said Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia, chairman of the committee, would support him.

"If we are to curb fatal accidents and wholesale murders on the streets of Washington," Mr. Seccombe said, "the only way to do it is to bring those responsible to justice."

Millard, who lived at 2706 Woodley place northwest, was a page at the Capitol and was on his way to the pages' school when struck. The only witness thus far discovered in D. A. Perry, night watchman at an apartment house at 2701 Connecticut avenue. He told police that he did not see the crash, but noticed the boy kneeling in the street. When he next looked the youngster had toppled over and was dying when he reached his side.

Death occurred before the arrival of an ambulance.

Funeral services for the boy will be conducted today at his home in Milton, Fla., where the body was sent Friday night.

He had been appointed a temporary page by Representative Cox, of Georgia, and was considered one of the outstanding members of the pages' school.

Andrews Urged To Call Parents On Telephone

Bill Andrews, missing son of Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer Andrews, yesterday was told that a telephone call or telegram to his home, with charges reversed, would make both him and his parents "feel better."

The 18-year-old University of Pennsylvania freshman, last reported in Bristol, Conn., Friday, was urged to "reach for a telephone and call your father" in a public appeal signed by Paul Sifton, deputy wage-hour administrator and life-long friend of the boy and his family.

"If you want to go back to school, all right—there's no trouble there," the message continued. "If you don't, that's all right, too. In fact, I rather suspect your father gets a kick out of that idea." The plea concluded: "If you're starting a new chapter, why not do it right?"

Cub Scouts of D. C. Area Display Hobbies and Craftsmanship

Post Staff Photos.

Over 400 Cub Scouts from Washington and as far away as Frederick, Md., displayed their talents yesterday at the annual Cub Hobby and Handicraft Show at Central High. All under 12, the Cubs exhibited everything from match-box collections to home-made midget autos and radios, for which 125 individual and 25 group awards were made. Shown in picture at top, left, are Indian tom-tom beaters, James Brentlinger and Edward Follin, both 11. In top center photo are James Brownfield and Anthony Bradley, both 9, of Pack 414, Silver Spring, Md., arranging their puppet show, with Shirley Ann Brownfield, 8, the appreciative audience. At top right, Clayton McCarl, 9, and Jimmy Learly, 10, of Greenbelt, look over their model Indian village. At a stage show after the exhibition, singers, dancers, lariat twisters and acrobats were rivaled by a band improvised by members of Pack 24, of Washington, from washtub, washboard, bazookahs and a piece of old vacuum cleaner hose. The bandsmen, shown above, were Marion Boat and Billy Mitchell, both 11, and Ray Espey, 10

Jurors Told Warrings Kited Debt 30 Times

U. S. Agent Testifies Money Owed Killeen Grew to $30,000

Case history of a $1,000 loan from Eddie Killeen, notorious gambler slain here in 1935, to Emmitt Warring and its alleged appearance afterward on books of the numbers czar as a $30,000 debt, were recounted yesterday in District Court by William H. F. Swain, special agent for the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The loan swelled mysteriously, Swain charged in the Warring conspiracy retrial, after the recipient faced Government investigation of a $30,000 discrepancy between his expenditures and reported income.

Emmitt, reputed "businessman" of the $2,000,000-a-year numbers racket operated here by the three brothers Warring, first told Federal agents, according to testimony, that he owed "about $1,000" to Killeen.

Borrowed From Killeen

When later pressed for an explanation of the gap between his expenses in 1934 and reported income, Warring "guessed" he had borrowed $30,000 from Killeen, instead of $1,000, Swain testified.

The revenue intelligence agent explained that the revelation occurred after Gordon L. Sadur, income tax expert now accused with the Warrings of conspiring to defraud the Government of levies on profits of the numbers game, said "Emmitt, why don't you tell the truth about the $30,000 or $40,000 you owed Killeen?"

Spirited exchanges between rival attorneys and frequent appeals to the bench highlighted Swain's cross-examination.

Former Assistant District Attorney Irvin Goldstein, lawyer for Sadur, hammered Swain's account of meetings with Sadur in November, 1936, by frequent suggestion that the revenue investigator's memory is at fault.

Goldstein demanded of the witness: "Is your recollection better today than it was in 1936?"

Resume Tomorrow

When Swain answered, "I shouldn't say that," Goldstein asked: "Is it as clear as it was at the last trial?"—a reference to the three-week proceedings which ended with a deadlocked jury last December.

Swain's reply, "not quite," was followed by a suggestion from District Attorney David A. Pine that the witness be confronted with the trial exhibits in question.

"I know that would be better for you," Goldstein retorted, "but I'll do this my way."

A few minutes later Goldstein pleaded, "now, be still," when Pine appealed to Justice Laws to rule out a question which the District Attorney maintained Swain already had answered adequately.

The trial will be resumed at 1 p. m. tomorrow.

Presenting America's Most Colorful Piano

THE NEW

Wurlitzer Spinet

An Instrument of Glorious Tone, Styled in the Modern Manner and Priced Within the Reach of All

The culmination of over two centuries of fine musical instrument building experience, this new Wurlitzer Spinet sets a vogue in artistic piano design that will endure for years to come. The graceful simplicity of its sweeping lines; the sparkling beauty of its colorful, soft-textured finish; the space-saving economy of its practical compactness—all harmonize perfectly with the present-day trend toward smart, attractive home furnishing and decoration.

KORDEVAN FINISH—Wurlitzer is finishing this new piano in Kordevon, a remarkably durable new finish of leather-like grain and unlimited color possibilities. Kordevon, unlike ordinary wood, is unaffected by heat, cold, humidity or dryness. It will withstand an unbelievable amount of abuse without showing signs of scuffing or scratching.

AN INSTRUMENT OF SUPERB TONE AND VOLUME—This new 36-inch, full-scale, 88-note compact piano possesses the most advanced features of construction. Included are Wurlitzer's exclusive augmented sounding board; calibrated element between the bridge and sounding board; acoustic tone chamber; even tension scale and responsive action. These create a tone of such quality and purity as to excite the admiration of the most critical musician. Such performance has hitherto been available only in much higher-priced pianos. Italy Won't Withdraw

Rome (Sunday), Feb. 5 (AP).—The Fascist Grand Council served notice today that Italian volunteers "will not abandon" the Spanish struggle "before it is ended, as it must end, with Franco's victory."

The council expressed "profound satisfaction" with Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag speech Monday, but refrained from disclosing Italian demands on France.

A communique issued after the meeting, which ended at 1:15 a. m. (7:15 p. m. E.S.T.) indicated Premier Mussolini did not think the moment had arrived to state Fascist demands on France, but would push on for a complete victory for Insurgent Generalissimo Franco.

Il Duce outlined the "general international situation" to the council, and Foreign Minister Count Ciano explained to members "certain particular aspects of Italy's foreign policy," it was announced.

The grand council will meet again Friday, and Italy's supreme defense commission will hold its sixteenth session tomorrow in a meeting which has been scheduled since the beginning of the year.

Mussolini heads the commission, which is composed of cabinet members and high military and naval commanders.

The council issued this statement: "The Grand Council of Fascism, meeting on the day in which, with the occupation of Gerona, all of Catalonia is now liberated from barbarous, Bolshevist oppression, sends its ardent greetings to the heroic Spanish warriors and (Italian) legionnaires, the solid factors in the victory, and makes known to all that the volunteer forces of fascism will not abandon the struggle before it has ended, as it must end, with Franco's victory."

Arms Ban of U. S. Held Recognition Of Franco Regime

By its embargo on shipment of arms to Spain, the United States virtually has recognized the belligerency of the Franco insurgency, Dr. Herbert Wright, professor of international law at Catholic University, contended yesterday.

Dr. Wright published a legalistic defense of the refusal of President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull to lift the embargo. He argued that the embargo acts of January 8 and May 1, 1937, placed the United States under an obligation to treat the Franco insurgency as a foreign government for the duration of the war.

Dr. Wright formerly was editor of international conferences for the State Department.

Cvetkovich had been minister of social welfare and justice. He is 46 years old and is known as a strong opponent of dictatorships.

Matthew Woll Assails Scrap-Iron Sales to Germany

Miami, Fla., Feb. 4 (AP).—Matthew Woll, a vice president of the American Federation of Labor, tonight charged the Treasury Department was permitting Germany to obtain such war materials as cotton, copper and scrap iron from this country by dumping "u n n e e d e d harmonicas, bird cages and canaries."

He said the procedure violated the President's foreign policy and that "undoubtedly President Roosevelt is unaware of this procedure of the Secretary of the Treasury which has reacted to the great advantage of Hitlerism."

Dr. Mann Seems to Be Enjoying 'Saving the Circus'

The WPA Federal Theater sponsored a special show at a New York armory Friday in honor of the "Save the Circus" movement. Munching spun sugar candy and apparently enjoying the show as much as any of the hundreds of underprivileged children present, were, reading from left, Dr. William Mann, director of the Washington Zoo; Melvin D. Hildreth, head of the Circus Fans Association, and Fred Miller, of London, an official of the Circus Fans Association of Great Britain cided were caused by bursting oil drums rather than explosives.

Hundreds of visitors were turned away from the Houses of Parliament.

Sir Thomas Moore, a Commons conservative, announced he would propose legislation for inflicting corporal punishment on persons convicted of bombing.

King George VI and Queen Elizabeth were at the Royal Lodge, Windsor, which was kept under a special watch. Police leaves in London were canceled, keeping nearly 10,000 men on duty.

Scotland Yard took the unusual precaution of locking all gates but one leading to the famous police center. The one left open was guarded by a constable who inspected all callers.

Grenades Found in Garden

Four men were ordered by London, Manchester and Liverpool police courts to be held on charges connected with bombings. Police discovered seven hand grenades and 11 rounds of ammunition in the garden of a Londoner, Michael John Lyons, 36, against whom charges were made in the Bow Street police court, itself heavily guarded.

An oath-bound international Irish secret society, known as the Irish Republican Brotherhood, was believed by some investigators to be providing the inspiration for the terrorism.

The brotherhood was formed in 1853 to unite Irishmen throughout the world in a scheme to establish an independent Irish republic completely separated from Great Britain.

The Irish republican army was described as the brotherhood's active weapon. The army is the outlawed, extremist Irish nationalist organization of which both the governments of Ireland and Northern Ireland disapprove strongly.

3,000 in Britain

It has an estimated 3,000 members in Britain but its strength in Ireland was not known.

Prime Minister Eamon De Valera of Ireland wishes to unite Ireland and Northern Ireland, but his policy is to achieve union by non-violent means.

Police in Ireland have been working with British police in the search for terrorists and De Valera himself apologized for the bomb blast on January 19 at the rear of the hotel where Frank Chamberlain, son of Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, was staying in Tralee.

Mexican Envoy, Roosevelt Confer On Oil Seizures

Negotiations between the State Department and the Mexican government for settlement of the controversy over expropriation of American oil properties appeared to be moving forward yesterday, as Francisco Castillo Najera, Mexican ambassador, conferred with President Roosevelt.

The ambassador went to the White House with Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, and talked to the President 45 minutes.

Senor Castillo Najera said his government was prepared to begin discussions with representatives of the American oil companies here or in Mexico City.

Mexico City, Feb. 4 (AP).—A mob today stormed the jail in the village of Contra Estaca, Sinaloa, and lynched three miners held for the slaying of seven persons and a criminal attack on a woman last Monday.

The trio were said to have gone on a shooting rampage Monday after committing a $4,000 robbery.

that he told the Senators America's frontier was in France.

However, one Senator who was present at the parley drily commented yesterday that "if they kept any record of that conference at the White House, 'hey've torn it up by this time—if they're smart."

(The Associated Press reported that Stephen Early, White House press secretary, said no record had been kept and that it was contrary to White House practice to keep stenographic reports of such conferences.)

In New York, Senator Bridges was quoted as saying that if the secrecy pledge was lifted, he would "talk plenty" about the Military Affairs conference. "There's a hell of a mess down there (in Washington) now," Bridges added.

"Any Senator who attended the Military Affairs Committee conference with the President cannot help being extremely puzzled when he reads the President's public announcement of foreign policy as expressed to the press yesterday," said Bridges, "as contrasted with the view which he outlined to the committee Tuesday."

The four-point foreign policy sketched by the Chief Executive included opposition to enangling alliances, continuance of world trade, approval of armament reduction, and peaceful maintenance of political, economical and social independence of all nations.

One member of the Military Affairs Committee yesterday pointed out that the word "democracy" had not appeared in the President's statement. This omission, the Senator said, indicated recognition of the possibility that France, for instance, might turn into a dictatorship in the next international crisis.

"'I think you will hear less talk in the future about a common front among the democracies," observed the Senator, who is not considered unfriendly to the Administration.

""Nevertheless, I am afraid that the President is determined to give every aid possible to England and France. And I don't think he has this country behind him."

Conceding there was nothing wrong in selling arms to France or any other nation at peace, the isolationist group in Congress seemed to fear that the President has gone to undue lengths in extending assistance to France. ""We should treat every country alike," they insisted.

Representative Knutson (Republican), of Minnesota, one of the few Congressional survivors who voted against war in 1917, exclaimed "we are going down the same road we followed in 1916."

"Ever since I can remember," he declared, "our foreign policy has been at least outlined by England. It's high time we adopted a foreign policy of our own, 100 per cent American, free of all influences from 10 Downing street."

Representative Short (Republican), of Missouri, observed, "Franklin D. Roosevelt is the best President Great Britain ever had.

On the other hand, Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, not always an Administration supporter, strongly commended the President's statement of foreign policy, declaring it was "'grounded in the principles of American traditions," and was couched in such language "that a schoolboy of the sixth grade could most definitely understand and repeat."

"It was such a pronouncement on the part of the President," said Senator McCarran, "'that I thought some days ago would be most beneficial to him in his present position, and most encouraging as a litany of faith which the people might repeat, and which a listening world might understand."

France Puts Spanish Border On War Basis

Antiaircraft Guns Ready if Franco's Planes Cross Frontier

Bourg Madame, French-Spanish Frontier, Feb. 4 (U.P.).—Almost every military measure short of placing the French frontier on a war footing was taken by France tonight as Spanish loyalist armies were hurled back toward the Pyrenees border.

Hundreds of French troops were quartered in this ancient village high in the Pyrenees guarding the international footbridge leading to Puigcerda around which 70,000 loyalist troops are concentrated, trapped on three sides by the insurgents.

Antiaircraft batteries were aimed to the southwest in the event insurgent planes fly over French territory.

Mountain artillery and machine guns were pointed toward Spain at every point where French territory might be violated by a foreign army—loyalist or insurgent.

Loyalists Retreating

The loyalists retreating on Puigcerda from the Seo de Urgel and Ripoll sectors were erecting fortifications, but French experts did not expect a long stand and were prepared for a mass exodus—possibly a sudden rush of armed men to the border.

Gen. Fagalde, commander of the sixteenth military region, spent the day conferring with other French officers, arranging for the deployment of troops to deal with the exodus.

Convoys of trucks arrived throughout the day bringing munitions, including stocks of trench mortars and machine guns which were put into position on the heights tonight.

The French apparently do not intend to turn back any men because it would mean certain death for many. But they do intend to prevent the arrival of an armed force in France and the possibility of making French territory a battleground.

Bitter Fight Expected

A bitter fight is expected at Puigcerda, only a stone's throw from Bourg Madame. In this region the anarchists are said to be in control and are determined to fight for every inch of ground. There were predictions that Puigcera would be fired before the anarchists retreated.

There were no reports here as to the extent of munitions supplies held by the loyalists, but they are strong numerically, particularly in the mountainous terrain which they know.

It was reported here that about 5,000 were concentrated at Puigcera proper, about 20,000 in the vicinity of Ripoll and about 60,000 at Seo de Urgel.

Nearing Figueras

Gerona fell when insurgent columns, behind artillery fire, appeared on the hills outside the city from three directions.

(Gen. Gambara, of the Italian troops, telegraphed Premier Benito Mussolini the "Littorio (Italian) division broke the enemy front at Seros. At the same hour the Littorio division occupied Gerona.")

The insurgents moved rapidly through Gerona and at nightfall were less than 17 miles from Figueras. They hoped to overtake the retreating loyalist army before it can flee over the French frontier.

Hungary Calls Army to Halt Racial Terror

Military Rule Ordered After Grenades Injure Score in Synagogue

By the United Press.

Budapest, Feb. 4.—Martial law throughout Hungary was ordered tonight. The action was described as a sequel to the bombing of a synagogue Friday.

Twenty persons were injured, four of them seriously, when terrorists believed to have been inspired by debate over new government regulations regarding Jews threw a hand grenade into Budapest's central synagogue.

Another grenade was thrown at the hysterical crowd as it surged out into the street. Some observers believed the terrorists were attempting to block proposals for modification of the new anti-Semitic regulations now before Parliament.

The proposals would recognize children of mixed marriages as Aryans if baptized before their seventh birthday and would exempt Jewish war heroes from the new restrictions. The laws identifying Jews as a separate racial group would be abolished.

Under the martial law order, the military will handle all such crimes as murder, attempted murder, conspiracy aiming at murder with firearms or explosives.

At the same time, it was announced the organ of the National Socialist (Nazi) Party Magyarsag had been banned for four months and the evening Achtuhrblatt, organ of the opposition leader, Count Stephan Bethlen, had been banned for four weeks.

The Achtuhrblatt ban, however, was not connected with the synagogue bombing.

Roosevelt Sails To War Games Next Week

Leahy to Accompany Him for Fleet Review On Cruiser Houston

Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations, is hoping to be able to accompany President Roosevelt on his projected cruise this month to observe fleet maneuvers in the Caribbean Sea. It tentatively is planned they would use the cruiser Houston.

This became known yesterday as the Military Affairs Committee sped work on the President's half-billion-dollar emergency defense program for presentation to the House this week.

While it is understood that uncertainty of world conditions and the legislative situation prevents definite announcement of the President's cruise, it was indicated Mr. Roosevelt and his chief naval adviser would sail from Norfolk between February 15 and 18. They would meet the fleet somewhere off the northern coast of South America, in the midst of its war game for defense of the Panama Canal.

En route to the war zone, the President is expected to discuss with Admiral Leahy changes in the naval high command to be made this year. With retirements, practically all of the Navy's ranking officers, afloat and ashore, are slated to be replaced in June. Leahy himself is scheduled for retirement the end of May, but there is a strong possibility he may be retained in view of the international situation.

Committee indorsement of the President's plan to augment the air, land and sea defenses of the Nation is expected with but two material changes. The House Naval Affairs Committee expects to drop the proposed $25,000,000 air base at Jacksonville, Fla., in favor of strengthening the present naval air station at Hampton Roads, Va., while the Army airplane expansion may be spread over three years instead of two.

The House Military Affairs Committee will meet tomorrow morning to consider the Army phases of the program and, according to Chairman May (Democrat), of Kentucky, will be kept in session until it is ready to report a bill to the House. Under the schedule announced last night by House leaders, the measure will be presented on the floor Thursday with passage set for Friday evening.

Will Limit Air Increase

Committee members said they were working on a plan to limit the 3,200 increase in Army plane strength to 1,000 annually. This variation of the War Department program is designed to prevent too many craft from becoming obsolete in a few years and to permit later developments in the latter part of the program.

However, Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, Chief of Air Corps, and other Army officials, are to sit in with the group tomorrow and may persuade the defense-minded committee of the advantages of the Administration plan.

Besides the airplane increase, the bill will contain provisions for training of pilots, enlarging the enlisted strength of the Air Corps to 45,000 men, spending $25,000,000 on Panama Canal defenses and $34,500,000 on "educational" orders of munitions to prepare industry to convert factories in wartime. The controversial subject of waiving competitive bidding in the procurement of planes probably will be delayed for latter consideration, it was indicated.

The House Naval Committee has all but finished its hearings on the naval phase of the $552,000,000 proposals. Tuesday it will hear testimony from peace societies in opposition to the development of naval air facilities at Guam. According to present plans, it will present its bill to the House the week after next.

Hearings on the Administration bill to establish 12 naval air bases in Alaska, the mid-Pacific, and the Atlantic, have been devoted largely to discussion of fortification of the little island of Guam. Members said yesterday the $5,000,000 provision for harbor improvements and shore construction there now faces little committee opposition.

Air Base Study Seen

The proposal to spend $15,000,000 for a major air base at Jacksonville, Fla., however, probably will be referred back to the Navy Department for further study, it was indicated. Before starting such a project, expected to cost $25,000,000 when completed, the group feels additional facilities should be provided for the one existing air base on this coast, at Norfolk.

Existing fields and shops at the Virginia base are not adequate for present requirements, even with the U. S. Fleet operating in the Pacific, naval officials state. Furthermore, the recent special naval shore development board recommended that the Norfolk station be expanded immediately into a major air base, committee members point out.

Meanwhile, members of the Senate Military Affairs Committee disclosed they would look into a proposed treaty with Panama to determine if it would hamper defense of the canal. Testimony of Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff, was said to have given the impression the treaty might force the Army to obtain consent of the Panama Republic in operating outside a 10-mile zone along the canal. At present, it was said, the Army may move into Panama territory at will.

From Wright Field, Ohio, came word that the first of 39 new "Flying Fortress" bombers had been delivered to Army officials by its makers. The new plane is generally similar to the present Boeing B-17 bombers now in service, it was said, but incorporates a number of improvements. Chief of these are superchargers, designed to assure maximum engine power at high altitudes.

They were ordered paid in full through the first 15 days of January.

Japan Reports Four-Day Border Clash Between Manchukuo Guard and Soviet Troops

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, Feb. 4.—The government of Japanese-dominated Manchukuo today reported four days of almost continuous fighting between Soviet Russian forces and "Manchukuo guards," but failed to state definitely the outcome or number of casualties.

Communiques issued at Hsinking, Manchukuo capital, indicated Russian "assaults" had been thrown back. While they described the "defending" forces as "Manchukuo guards" it was believed here Japanese regulars were involved.

It is known that some of Japan's finest troops have been stationed along the Manchukuo-Siberian border instead of fighting in China.

Apparently these were the most serious border hostilities since last July and August when Japanese and Russian units battled near the intersection of Siberia, Manchukuo and Korea.

The Manchukuo government charged Soviet cavalrymen attacked a Manchukuo border garrison Tuesday, but were beaten back. Four other attacks followed that day

Minor skirmishing and maneuvering ensued, the communique from Hsinking said, until the Russians assaulted the same border point three times Friday.

The scene of the fighting was given as Mengoskili, an isolated region 60 miles northeast of Manchuli. Manchukuo has protested to Russia.

(On Wednesday the Russian government reported a new clash in which it said 18 Japanese and Manchukuoan soldiers attempted Tuesday to take a Soviet island in the Argun River, Manchukuo's northwestern boundary with Russia.

Manchukuo communiques did not give the number of troops involved in this week's clashes nor list casualties.

Domei, Japanese news agency, said informed sources in Hsinking interpreted the "Russian assault" as an effort to force Japan to retreat from her position on renewal by the Moscow government of permission for Japanese to fish in Soviet territorial waters.

Lieut. Gen. Seishiro Itagaki, war minister and president of the Manchurian Affairs Bureau, has told the Japanese Parliament why Manchukuo recently suspended the customary annual contribution to the joint Japan-Manchukuo defense fund.

He said Manchukuo was devoting about $10,000,000 annually to "construction of airfields and highways along the border."

Editor Warns On Alliances With Fascists

England and France Are Totalitarian-Minded, Edward Keating Says

America must not be deceived into alliance with the "Fascist-minded governments" of Great Britain and France under the guise of "democratic co-operation," Edward Keatnig, editor of Labor, warned yesterday at an informal discussion of American foreign policy conducted at the Cosmos Club.

Mussolini would not be in power today "except for the assistance of British and American bankers," Keating charged.

Barnet Nover, of The Post editorial staff, described the Spanish question as the "crux" of this country's present relations with France and England. "What happens in Spain," he said, "is of vital significance for the safety of France and the future of Great Britain."

Fascism can act "while insisting it is not acting," Nover pointed out. "It can call intervention nonintervention, an antidemocratic pact, anticommunism. These are advantages of the foreign policy of totalitarian countries over our own."

Other participants in the symposium were Justice James H. Wolfe, of the Supreme Court of Utah; William M. Leiserson, chairman of the National Mediation Board, and Henry T. Hunt, former Mayor of Cincinnati.

library itself will be administered as a branch of the National Archives.

Ways and means for carrying out the various steps involved in this program formed the chief purpose of last night's dinner conference. It included announcement of the formation of a committee of 60, under the chairmanship of Frank C. Walker, of New York, to raise the necessary funds by means of private gifts.

Dr. Waldo G. Leland, chairman of the executive committee, and director of the American Council of Learned Societies, presided at the dinner meeting. He previously issued a statement in which he commented on "the magnitude and importance of so generous a gift."

"Most scholars would agree without difficulty," he said, "that the quarter of a century through which the United States is passing, from the close of the war into the decade of the forties, is one of the most significant periods of American history . . .

"Consequently, the proposal of the President to establish under public control, exercised by the National Archives, what is undoubtedly the key collection for the study of this most recent period, is particularly welcome to all students of American history."

Distinguished Guests

The distinguished guests at last night's dinner came from many distant points, as well as Washington, and included the following: (All addresses are Washington unless given otherwise.)

The President, Dr. Randolph G. Adams, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Mrs. George Backer, New York City; Dr. Charles A. Beard, New Milford, Conn.; Dr. Robert C. Binkley, Cleveland, Ohio; Julian P. Partial Text of Griffenhagen Report on District

The report of Griffenhagen & Associates to the Senate and House District Committees on the proposed set-up of the District government follows in summarized form:

"Governing body" of five to seven members, similar to a city council, would exercise policy-making and legislative functions but have no executive powers.

An administrative officer, with powers like those of a city manager, would be subordinated to the cuoncil but would have sole administrative control over the following 17 departments:

Department of Finance

Functions: Centralized direction and operation of a complete and integrated system of financial administration including financial planning, budgeting, accounting, fiscal reporting, current auditing of cash and receivables, preauditing of expenditures, property control, purchasing, and the rendering of certain other administrative services for all departments of the government.

Organization: Headed by a director of finance. Divisions of the budget, of accounts and control, of purchases and property control, and of administrative services; such other divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be established in accordance with law.

Department of Personnel

Functions: Centralized personnel administrative, including services to all departments, and control to insure the carrying out of established policies in relation to classification and compensation of positions, testing applicants and certifying eligibles for appointment, maintaining service ratings, controlling transfers and other changes in the service and separations from the service, and administering retirement and compensation provisions. Preferably all this would be done under a modern, comprehensive, and unified personnel system for the District established by new and appropriate legislation.

Organization: Headed by a director of personnel, with a board of personnel having appeal, rule-making, and advisory powers. Such functional divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Revenue

Functions: Administration, under a unified and comprehensive system, of all tax and revenue laws of the District except as administration may be assigned to other departments for more convenient and effective handling; tax research; the receiving, safekeeping and accounting for cash and securities, and the depositing, disbursing and investing of cash.

Organization: Headed by a director of revenue; with a board of revenue having appeal, equalization, rule-making, treasury, of assessments, of revenue receipts, of taxpayers' accounts, of audits and investigations, of legal affairs, of licenses, and of motor vehicles; such other divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be established in accordance with law.

Department of Law

Functions: Interpretation of law and conduct of legal actions for all departments of the District Government as the chief law authority.

Organization: Headed by a director of law (or corporation counsel if the present name is preferred). Such divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Education

Functions: Conduct of the educational program of the public school system.

Organizatin: Headed by a director of education (or superintendent of schools if the present title is preferred), with an advisory committee on education. Such divisions and schools as may be deemed necessary and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Libraries

Functions: Provision of circulating and reference library facilities for residents of the District.

Organization: Headed by a director of libraries, with an advisory committee on libraries if desired. Such divisions and branch libraries as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Police

Functions: Maintenance of peace and order within the District, administration of all activities for the prevention and detection of crime, regulation of street traffic and safety, and miscellaneous regulation and law enforcement.

Organization: Headed by a director of police. Divisions of crime prevention, of crime detection, of patrol, and of traffic; such other divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Fire

Functions: Fire prevention and extinguishment.

Organization: Headed by a director of fire. Divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Public Utilities

Functions: Regulation of gas, electric, transportation, and other public utilities in the District.

Organization: Headed by a director of public utilities, with a board of public utilities to exercise the functions of promulgating orders, rules, and regulations; conducting hearings; and disposing of cases properly brought before it. Such divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law. If preferred, however, the existing title of "public utilities commission" could be continued for the board, despite the proposed division of functions between the board and the director, which the "board" title is intended to indicate.

Department of Insurance

Functions: Examination and regulation of insurance companies in the District.

Organization: Headed by a director of insurance. Such divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Occupational Standards

Functions: Examination and licensing of applicants to practice professions and vocations under laws imposing qualification requirements for practitioners, and regulating the practice of occupations licensed. The administration of the minimum wage law and any other laws imposing standards with which employers are required to comply, are proposed also to be included, even though they are of a somewhat different character from those of the primary functions of the proposed department, because, in the absence of a sufficient volume of functions such as usually are assigned to a department of labor, there is no more appropriate place.

Organization: Headed by a director of occupational standards, with a board of occupational standards and, if desired, with separate boards representative of the various occupations, which preferably should have only advisory functions, but which could be continued as separate examining boards, but in any event with the records, administrative, and regulatory functions centered in the department. Divisions of records, of examinations, and of investigations; and such other divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Unemployment Compensation

Functions: Administration of unemployment compensation and employment office services under the unemployment compensation act.

Organization: Headed by a director of unemployment compensation who should be designated as "executive director" for purposes of compliance with Federal statutes and regulations, with an unemployment compensation commission hyaing policy-determining, rule-making, and supervisory powers to the extent made necessary by the social security act. Divisions of unemployment compensation and of employment office service; such other divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Health

Functions: Administration of a modern and comprehensive public health program for the District, including control of preventable diseases, public health nursing and school health services, sanitary and food inspection, keeping of vital statistics, and public health education; operation of clinics and hospitals, and furnishing of medical and laboratory services to other departments.

Organization: Headed by a director of health. Such divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Public Welfare

Functions: Administration of public assistance including all forms of general and categorical relief; care of dependent, neglected, and delinquent children; operation of District charitable and correctional institutions and supervision of contract relations with Federal and private institutions; administration of laws relating to parole and indeterminate sentences.

Organization: Headed by a director of public welfare, with a board of public welfare having appeal, rule-making, fact-finding and advisory functions and charged particularly with the establishment of rules for the classification of persons committed to the care of the department, for their assignment to, and transfer among, institutions, and for the application of laws relating to indeterminate sentences and parole.

Department of Public Works

Functions: Design and construction of street, sewer, water, building and other public improvements, except parks and playgrounds; operation and maintenance of public buildings; inspection of other buildings; street cleaning, and collection and disposal of garbage and other refuse.

Organization: Headed by a director of public works. Divisions of engineering, of construction, of equipment, of sanitation, of public buildings, of building inspection and of water; such other divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

Department of Parks and Recreation

Functions: Acquisition, development and maintenance of parks and park areas of the District, including playgrounds, and the development and administration of a comprehensive program of recreation for the District.

Organization: Headed by a director of parks and recreation, with an advisory committee on recreation if desired. Divisions of parks and of recreation; such other divisions as may be desirable and as may be provided by law.

Department of Title Records

Functions: Recording of deeds, mortgages and other instruments evidencing title to property, and filing incorporation papers.

Organization: Headed by a director of title reoords (or recorder of deeds if continuation of the present title is preferred). Such divisions as may be deemed advisable and as may be provided in accordance with law.

60-40% Plan For D.C. Taxes Ready as Bill

Overton's Formula To Be Introduced Early This Week

The Overton plan for putting the annual Federal payments to the District on a flexible basis was released in legislative form yesterday and will be introduced as a bill early this week.

Devised by Senator Overton (Democrat), Louisiana, chairman of the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations, the formula would supplant the lump sum method of fixing the Federal share in the District budget, which has been in effect since the 60-40 percentage formula was distcontinued by Congress 15 years ago.

The Overton plan, based upon the amount of tax-free Federal land in the National Capital, would give the District $8,015,980 instead of $5,000,000 in Federal aid in the 1940 budget or 20 per cent of the general revenue fund instead of a little more than 10 per cent.

Would End Uncertainity

The formula would end the uncertainity of the Federal payment and for the first time recognize both the loss of revenue to the District from Federal-owned land and the services performed by the National Capital for the national Government.

Senator Overton, who has conferred with civic leaders as well as fiscal and legislative experts, said he would ask Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee, to designate a subcommittee to hold hearings on the measure.

Subsequently he may offer it as an amendment to the District revenue bill.

Sums Would Vary

The Federal payment, while no longer subject to the whim of Congress, would vary from year to year, under the Overton plan, as the District's general revenue appropriations vary and as the amount of Federal land within the city rises or falls.

Under the bill, fractions of less than 1 per cent will not be used in the formula. Thus, though the percentage for the next fiscal year actually would be more than 20 per cent, only the round number would be used.

The Federal land would be ascertained each year as of August 1 of the preceding fiscal year. The percentage would be deducted by figuring the ratio of the Federal land to the whole area of the District.

Area Defined

The area of the District is defined as "the total number of acres of land," or 44,317, less the amount permanently covered by water, or 5,910, which leaves a comparable figure to be used in the formula as 38,407.

All of the Federal holdings in the District are not included in the figures used by Senator Overton to arrive at the Federal percentage. Excluded are:

Any land embraced within the boundaries of streets, avenues, roads and alleys.

Half of any Federal park areas.

Any land used exclusively by the government of the District.

Land May Vary

While the Federal land may vary in subsequent years, the Overton bill fixes the amount for the current year as 7,971 acres. This is determined by deducting 2,916 acres of park lands, or half the total, and 210 acres used by the District government from the total Federal-owned land aggregating 11,097 acres.

The ratio of the Federal land of 7,971 acres to the District land of 38,407 is thus determined for the next fiscal year as 20 per cent plus.

As the general revenue fund estimates in the 1940 budget total, $40,079,900, the Federal payment under the Overton formula would amount to $8,015,080.

Follows Precedent

"This formula follows the precedent of other Congresses in putting the Federal payments on a percentage basis," Senator Overton explained, "but this plan has a tangible basis of fact rather than guesswork."

He recalled that from the time the commission form of government was established in 1879 until 1920 Federal payments were 50 per cent of the local budget and from then until 1924 the ratio was 60-40. Actually, the latter law was on the statute books until last year, though inoperative.

U. S. Proposes Night Ban on Child Labor

By the Associated Press.

Night work for children between 14 and 16 years of age would be prohibited under proposed new regulations of the Department of Labor's children's bureau.

The bureau proposed to limit hours of employment for children to the period between 6 a. m. and 7 p. m. A hearing on the proposal will be held February 15.

Report Urges City Council and Manager For New District Government

District

cies of the city council, he would have complete authority in purely administrative matters.

All independent boards, including the Board of Education, would be abolished, but the report recommends that advisory committees be retained to work with the departmental heads. Thus the director of education, or superintendent of schools, while appointed by the "administrative authority," would be assisted by an advisory committee.

Utility Duties Divided

The report proposes that the duties of the Public Utility Commission be divided between a director and a board, with the latter continuing to hold hearings, promulgate orders and adopt policies.

The present department of vehicles and traffic is absorbed by the department of police but presumably would become one of the suggested divisions under the director.

Fewer administrative changes are recommended for the health and welfare departments than any of the present departments of the District government, and the board of public welfare would be retained with rather broad policy-making powers.

Recreation Consolidated

For the first time all public recreational activities within the Distrcit are consolidated under a single head, thus eliminating the playgrounds department, the community center department, and the Federal control of certain park and recreation areas.

Recognition of many of the new functions of the District government is seen in the proposals to establish the department of occupational standards and the department of unemployment compensation, while the department of public works merges all of the engineering and maintenance activities of the city.

The 17 departments proposed to supplant existing departments, independent agencies, boards, etc., are:

Finance, personnel, revenue, law, education, libraries, police, fire, public utilities, insurance, occupational standards, unemployment compensation, health, public welfare, parks and récreation, and title records.

Another Report Soon

Details of the duties of these departments have not been disclosed but will be explained in a subsequent report to be released early this week.

The report criticizes the present commission form of government, established by Congress in 1879, and points out that the Capital's local government has grown like Topsy until it is now far behind the times.

"The existing organization has been built around an act adopted over 60 years ago and has obviously grown without plan or system," the report states in a preface. "It is now unbelievably complex, confused, illogical and cumbersome."

"Little Rhyme or Reason"

Later, in discussing the overlapping and complex character of the District government, the report says:

"Little of rhyme or reason, logico r consistency, is to be found in the whole conglomeration. As might be expected, the inevitable result is confusion among the several agencies and their officers as to the limits of their authority and vagueness as to the extent of their responsibilities."

Griffenhagen likens the board of commissioners to a "city commission" operating "under the outdated and rather generally discredited 'commission form' of city government."

The proposed new setup would be dual in character, with the policy-making functions and the administration distinctly separated. One is called the "legislative authority" and the other "the administrative authority."

Defines Duties

"The legislative authority, by whatever name it may be called," the report states, "would be of multiple membership and express its will, within the scope of its delegated powers, by means of ordinances or similar enactments. It should have no executive powers or duties."

This authority also would take over the task of performing many minor legislative functions now required of Congress.

"The administrative authority, by whatever name called," the report continues, "would be responsible to the governing body for carrying out and enforcement of the provisions of the organic act and the ordinances adopted thereunder through the administrative organization provided. It is this authority to which the department heads would look for direction."

Regarding the "governing body," Griffenhagen says:

"The board of commissioners, with substantially increased ordinance-making powers and preferably with an enlarged membership, might be continued as the legislative authority or governing body so visualized.

"Or the commission might be renamed a council or assembly or constituted in such a way as might be decided upon as a matter of policy.

"The composition of this body—and the method of selection of its members—has little or no bearing on the plan of administrative organization suggested in this report.

Part-Ttime Compensation

"However, if the Board of Commisioners is continued, it would be well to expand its membership to five or seven, and compensate its members on a modest, part-time basis, in recognition of the character of the functions to be exercised.

"'Under the present policy, the President would appoint the members of the commission, and it would be difficult in a commission of only three to give adequate recognition to the various points of view of the community. In a legislative body as many points of view as practicable should be brought to bear."

Griffenhagen points out that the importance and authority of the "governing body" would be dependent upon the extent of the delegation of legislative powers to it by Congress.

"At present, the legislative jurisdiction of the District Commissioners is very limited," the report says, "and Congress is unnecessarily burdened with a great number of bills of purely local concern and, many of them, of trivial importance from the standpoint of the national interest.

"It is believed that the delegation to the governing body of ordinance power over such matters would be both desirable and feasible if the proposed separation of legislative and administrative functions in the District government were effected."

The delegation of such legislative powers, Griffenhagen suggests, might be accomplished through amendment of the District's organic act.

The report, while avoiding fiscal problems, proposes that the governing body be authorized to negotiate contracts for the exchange of services between the Federal and District governments, similar to the plan proposed in the Jacobs' report.

Urges Fixed Ratio

It also urged that the Federal payment be fixed, either by formula or agreement, at a figure that will remain approximately the same for at least five years.

The Federal payment, however, presumably would not be related to the exchange of contractural services, which the Jacobs report estimated would give the District a $2,000,000 differential.

Divorcement of the District government from the dictation of the Budget Bureau, long advocated by District officials, is recommended in the report. The administrative officer, assisted by a director of finance and a competent budget staff, it explains, would submit a complete, fully detailed, and balanced budget to Congress, thus obviating the necessity for intervention by the Budget Bureau.

Would Keep Park Body

While proposing the elimination of overlapping District functions performed by quasi-Federal agencies, the report recommends that the National Capital Park and Planning Commission be retained but with its authority over purely District park lands curtailed.

The District government, it says, should have jurisdiction over the acquisition and development of park areas that are distinctly for the benefit of local residents.

The title of the commission, Griffenhagen adds, might well be reduced to "National Capital Planning Commission."

Court Recommendations

The report makes no effort to change the relationship of the District to the Federal courts but does recommend that the several municipal courts be separately organized into one unitary municipal court with such special branches as are needed. The register of wills, as an officer of the District Court, should be continued, Griffenhagen suggests.

FCC Radio License Held to Be Censorship

Caldwell Tells Group It Is Threat to 'Due Process and Liberty'

Charges that the licensing system as applied by the Federal Communications Commission goes counter to the intention of Congress by effecting censorship over the radio, were made last night by Louis G. Caldwell, former general counsel for the Federal Radio Commission.

He spoke at the concluding session of a two-day conference on administrative law held by the George Washington University Law School in the United States Chamber of Commerce Hall. It was attended by nearly 500 lawyers and law students.

Caldwell called the numerous licensing systems "the greatest threat to liberty and due process yet to appear on the horizon of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence."

He especially ridiculed the purpose he ascribed to the FCC to "protect the public from Mae West, the Martians, and the profanity of a Pulitzer prize play."

Objects to His Remarks

William J. Dempsey, present general counsel for the FCC, whose address followed Caldwell's, promptly labeled the latter's reference to the prosecutor-judge relationship in the Commission's procedure, as "picturesque rather than accurate," and proceeded to demonstrate the statutory and practical necessity of some of the matters to which Caldwell had taken objection.

The side of the Government agencies, and the need for regulation and control were also affirmed by Charles Sager Collier, professor of law at the university, and by Ewin L. Davis, member of the Federal Trade Commission.

At the afternoon session, Dr. James M. Landis, dean of Harvard Law School, discussed the need of developing a philosophy of the relation between the courts and administrative agencies of the Government, declaring that the scope of judicial review of administrative rulings is at present a matter of confusion.

Other speakers were Kenneth C. Sears, professor of law at the University of Chicago; Dr. Frederick F. Blachly, of the Brookings Institution; Carl McFarland, Assistant Attorney General of the United States; John W. Scott, member of the Federal Power Commission, and Ben S. Fisher, member of the District bar.

New Safety Device Checks 47 Details On Air Transport

St. Louis, Feb. 4 (AP).—A "tell-tale" device, which automatically checks the functioning of 47 details of airplane operation, has been devised for a new sub-stratosphere transport under construction here by the Curtiss-Wright Corporation.

The company announced today that the system, a panel of lights which indicates everything from motor heat to whether the stewardess shut the door, had been designed for its new skyliner, the 30-passenger, twin-engined "CW-20," now nearing completion.

Officials termed it a "fourth pilot," counting the Sperry "robot" and the two human pilots, and said it was one of the aircraft manufacturing industry's principal contributions to date in simplifying plane operation and overcoming "pilot fatigue."

More Arms Sold To China Than Japan, Hull Says

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Hull disclosed yesterday that the United States had sold more armaments to China than to Japan in the last year and a half.

The Secretary of State made this known in a letter to Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, acknowledging receipt of protests against shipment of scrap iron to Japan.

He said the Department of State has issued licenses for the export of arms, ammunition and implements of war to China valued at $14,358,277.30 and to Japan valued at $10,922,693.08.

Dispute Looms On Court Choice

Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, disclosed yesterday he has asked a Senate judiciary subcommittee to postpone action on President Roosevelt's nomination of Dean Charles E. Clark, of Yale Law School, to be judge of the Court of Appeals of the Second Circuit, which covers the districts of Vermonth, Connecticut and New York.

Senator Austin said he wants to study the writings of Dean Clark to determine "whether he favors the obliteration of State sovereignty in favor of a parliamentary national government and whether he believes in curbing the authority of the Supreme Court."

Andrews Warns Wage 'Chiselers'

Pittsburgh, Feb. 4 (U.P.).—Wage-Hour Administrator Andrews addressing the fiftieth annual meeting of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute Alumni Association here tonight warned that violations of the fair labor standards act by "chiseling" employers would not be tolerated.

"This act is going to be enforced with all the vigor and even-handed justice of which we are capable," said Andrews. "That man who complies has nothing to fear except from the chiseling competitor who must be made to comply and we intend to make him comply."

West Virginia Town Caught Between Two Heavy Floods

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

At Point Pleasant, W. Va., the State flood commission took charge of the historic river town after more than 300 persons were forced from their homes to higher ground. come even with the 7-foot level of the river at the Wisconsin avenue gauge here.

At Sycamore Island, six miles upstream, from Washington, the Potomac was due to rise 3 feet above normal. Experts of the rivers and floods division of the Weather Bureau here said that only unpredicted strong southerly winds when the river reached its District crest tonight could create considerable flood damage.

A slight rise in temperature with gentle variable winds becoming south is in store for the District today. The mercury was to go up farther tomorrow, with cloudiness and rain forecast. Low for the night was at 20.

The rain-swollen Potomac undermined a section of Western Maryland Railway track between Cumberland, Md., and Elkins, W. Va., halting train service, which will be restored today. At Williamsport many families moved to higher ground, according to Associated Press, apprehensive over the 15-foot rise of the river and an expected crest of 18 feet. Cumberland residents, severely hit by the flood of 1936, were relieved yesterday when the river began to recede after approaching within a foot of flood stage.

Lowlands along the Shenandoah River from Riverton, Va., to Harpers Ferry, W. Va., were flooded as the stream rose eight feet above normal.

Most serious flood conditions were on the Cumberland River. At Burnside, Ky., which has a normal flood level of 50 feet, the crest stood at 65.6 feet early yesterday morning. While at Celina, Tenn., an average 28-foot high was expected to reach 53 feet by tomorrow or Tuesday.

The Ohio River was in flood stage from below Pittsburgh to the mouth, stages surging from 12 feet above normal at Pittsburgh to 7 feet above at Point Pleasant, W. Va. Weather Bureau forecast was for a crest exceeding flood levels by 3 to 10 feet in the lower regions of the river between today and Friday.

The heavy rise of the Kanawha River, which runs into the Ohio at Point Pleasant, submerged the low-lying areas, forcing 300 persons to flee their homes.

Twelve hundred others were driven from their homes in West Virginia by the overflowing Ohio and its branches, roads were inundated and bridges washed out. Six persons were believed to be dead. Gov. Homer Holt took steps for immediate flood relief.

The Red Cross list of shelterless families included 350 at Huntington, W. Va., and 250 in Knox County, Tenn. Hardest hit was Kentucky, where over 3,000 families were stricken. Gov. A. B. Chandler sent highway crews into the river ravaged towns along the Licking and Cumberland Rivers. National Guardsmen were ordered to stand by at Frankfort, Ky. Two aged persons succumbed to exposure in Middleboro.

Heavy snows blanketed New Mexico and Arkansas. Forty men, women and children, marooned by the snow for days in the sawmill village of Los Topias, were dropped supplies for 30 days from a mercy plane.

A tornado demolished 35 frame dwellings, damaged 100 others, injured a number of persons and killed a child at Columbia, S. C.

Library of Congress Moving Into New $9,000,000 Annex

Modern, Scientific Building Has Capacity For 10,000,000 Volumes; Electric Trams Link This Structure With Old

(Pictures in Rotogravure Section.)

Although the new $9,000,000 annex of the Library of Congress has not been officially accepted by the Government, and the public will not be admitted to its reading and study rooms for several more weeks, it was learned last week that the library has started moving in under an agreement of "tentative acceptance."

Several divisions of the extensive and complicated organization of one of the greatest—if not greatest of national libraries—are reported by library officials to have been set up in the annex and to be operating smoothly. Among them are the card division and the copyright office. Accessions and books are also being moved.

The card division prepares catalog cards for the library's own volumes, and duplicates for libraries throughout the country. It turns out in an average year 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 cards. This division is reported to have been in operation in the annex for nearly a fortnight, and finds there one of the most complete and up-to-date print shops and binderies in the country. It has been set up under the supervision of the Government Printing Office.

While described as an "annex" to the main library building, and in a different architectual style than the building that has become familiar to citizens throughout the country, the new building is described by the chief assistant librarian, Martin A. Roberts, as having expanded space and more modern facilities than the older structure.

He points out, for example, that while the main building has 13,000,000 cubic feet of space, as compared with 9,500,000 in the annex, the floor space in the latter building is five acres greater. This is because of the higher ceilings and exhibition halls in the main building.

The differing arrangements also make it possible to shelve about 10,000,000 volumes in the annex, whereas the main building will accommodate about half that many.

According to present plans, which are being followed out in the moving-in process, it is stated, the copyright office occupies a division on the first floor, with a separate entrance on the south front. In the lower levels are spaces for storage and mechanical equipment.

In a sub-basement are quarters for the maintenance staff and also for photographic work. The latter has the advantage of seven darkrooms, rooms for copying and enlarging and two storage rooms for photographic material. Thermostatically controlled hot, cold and ice water for developing baths are only a suggestion of the scientific completeness with which the building is equipped, Roberts points out. This includes equipment for air-conditioning the entire building.

The printing office and bindery are located above the sub-basement.

When the annex is completely occupied, it is reported, the second floor will accommodate divisions that perform the various functions necessary when books are received and before they are ready for use—including classification and shelf-listing, cataloging, co-operative cataloging and classification.

The third floor is to be devoted entirely to the card division. On the fourth floor there is the central stack area, and in addition about 32,000 square feet of storage space, and some of the air-conditioning machinery.

Some of the mechanical equipment that will enable the annex to function in co-operation with the main building, and with the least expense of waste time and motion is handled from control rooms that are just below the reading rooms on the fifth floor. The main control room, for example, contains the terminus of a carrier system whereby oval leather pouches with a capacity of eight average size octavo volumes can be shot at a speed of 21 feet a second from one building to the other—covering the 700-foot trip in 28 seconds. Electric trams will transport larger shipments by means of a connecting tunnel.

Book carriers operating quietly and at high speed also enable the transfer of books among various "decks" of the stacks in the annex itself. These travel at 60 feet a minute.

The decks in the stacks are 24 in number, each with a capacity of more than 400,000 books, and each separately organized, but in such a manner as to be quickly and easily co-ordinated with the rest.

Facilities for readers and students, which are built up through the system just mentioned are climaxed in the arrangements for reading and study on the fifth or top floor of the simply designed building. This floor is set back and exactly covers the stack area of the interior.

Two reading rooms, each about 60 by 100 feet here extend north and south from a spacious card-catalog room. Each will accommodate several hundred readers, and has alcoves for reference books, rooms for special collections, and a reference and book-issuing desk. The rooms are 35 feet high and are completely enclosed, being ventilated and lighted artifically. On the same floor, arranged in two tiers, are 172 study rooms, measuring about 8 by 11 feet. These have outside light and independently controlled temperature and ventilation.

Dr. Peabody To Quit as Head Of Glenn Dale

Says He Only Wanted to Stay Till Project Was Operating Efficiently

Dr. J. Winthrop Peabody, general superintendent of District Tuberculosis Hospital, said yesterday he would resign shortly as superintendent at Glenn Dale Sanatorium.

"I have stayed longer in this position than I was justified in doing, but I felt I should stay until the Glenn Dale project was completed and placed on an efficient operation basis," he said.

"This has been accomplished," he added.

It is understood he will be succeeded by Dr. Daniel L. Finucane, present assistant at the sanatorium.

Since taking over the job, Dr. Peabody has carried on his private practice, it was pointed out. Health Officer George C. Ruhland, in the past, has maintained the post at Glenn Dale should be held by a full-time superintendent.

Negotiations are now under way to retain Dr. Peabody's services as chief consultant at the hospital. He met yesterday with Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer, for a discussion on this arrangement.

U. S. Workers To Be Taxed on Home Property

Assets in States Of Legal Residence Held Liable to Levy

The District Board of Tax Appeals ruled yesterday that local Government employes claiming residence elsewhere must pay taxes here on intangible personal property.

In an opinion handed down by Jo V. Morgan, it was contended that "such persons are domiciled in the District and not in States wherein they claim 'legal residence'" and consequently are subject to the tax.

The case involved a special attorney for the Department of Justice, who claimed legal residence in Boston, although he has been living here for 20 years. The board stated that the attorney paid a tax of $1.79 on intangible assets here but failed to pay on assets held in a Baltimore bank.

Morgan's ruling read:

"Declaration of intention to reside in a State and the fact of voting therein lose most if not all of their import when determining whether an employe of the Government domiciled in the District, when it is considered that a great many employes of the Government, who have made their home in Washington for many years and intend to remain here for the rest of their lives, or at least indefinitely, carry into practice a widespread belief that it is convenient to maintain in one of the States what is commonly called a 'legal residence,' wherein they register and vote in elections, and adopt residential addresses, for the purpose of improving their status as a Government employe in relation to State quotas and preferment in Federal employment, and of supplying an apparent basis to support claims or calls upon members of Congress and politicians for assistance and backing in the employe's plans for advancement in Government service."

Jesse Jones Predicts '39 Trade May Reach 70-Billion Mark

By the United Press.

Chairman Jesse H. Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, predicted last night that business this year may equal levels of 1937, when the peak of the recovery movement was reached.

If 1937 levels are attained, a national income of $70,000,000,000 is in prospect. In 1937, national income exceeded $69,000,000,000, and preliminary indications are that in 1938 it dropped to $62,500,000,000.

Undersecretary of the Treasury John W. Hanes has said repeatedly that if national income can be raised to $75,000,000,000, the Federal Government could balance the budget on the basis of current spending.

"I am confident that there will be a moderate upturn in business, starting as soon as weather conditions become favorable again," Jones said.

"Very likely, the upturn which was checked by bad weather in January will resume before spring."

He added that he believes that business in 1939 certainly will be well ahead of 1938.

Jones' views were in line with those held by both Government and various private economists. Government economic experts are convinced that there is no cause for concern in the slight business letdown in January. They believe that the setback may continue throughout February, but that with the spring, a rise of from 20 to 25 per cent in business activity is likely.

Economists of the United States Chamber of Commerce reported that the net results of business conditions in January augur well for the rest of the year. They are particularly impressed with the ability of business to resist unfavorable international developments.

District 'Put Out of Union' By World Fair

Special States Day Schedule Omits Mention of Capital

Long used to being voteless, the District of Columbia yesterday underwent its crowning humiliation and was put out of the Union altogether.

Whether it will be readmitted depends in all likelihood upon the determination of Washington residents to make their voices heard.

Official notice of the exclusion of the District came in a press release from the New York World's Fair in which it was stated, "Every State in the Union and the four possessions — Alaska, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and Virgin Islands—have been assigned special days at the New York World's Fair 1939 for the producing of elaborate programs that will prove to be among the most attractive features of the exposition."

After noting that addresses will be made by outstanding men and women from each State and possession, on these days, the fair offices listed the dates on which each State would be honored.

Capital Not Mentioned

Washingtonians looked in vain for any mention of the District of Columbia. At first it was thought some oversight might have been made, and The Washington Post established immediate contact with the Fair headquarters in New York.

"If the District of Columbia is not on the list we sent you, no day has been officially established for it," the press department reported uncompromisingly.

Later a spokesman for Grover Whalen was reached by our New York correspondent.

"State, county and city days were fixed upon," he stated, "on request of the communities concerned. The fair will be glad to fix a day for the District of Columbia, as soon as it makes formal request and fixes upon the day it wants."

District a "Step-Child"

Before this advice had arrived, several citizens of the District had expressed themselves on the situation.

James E. Colliflower, former secreary of the Board of Trade and civic worker, said that either the District had been overlooked unintentionally, or "this is just following out our disfranchisement and making us a real step-child." The apparent belief of the fair's officials that they had the whole United States represented in the list from which the District's name alone was missing, gave color to this version.

Lemuel A. Carruthers, of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, found the omission incredible.

"If it is deliberate, the citizens of Washington would have a right to protest," he stated. "I know there was a District of Columbia Day at the Sesquicentennial Fair in Philadelphia in 1926, because I went to it. I can't believe they would knowingly omit the Nation's Capital, or the District, especially when it has more population than some ten of the other States."

Ballou "Surprised"

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, said that President Whalen undoubtedly knew of the existence of the District, because a number of months ago he had the children of Washington circularized with essay contests to stir up interest in the fair. "It is rather surprising," he added, "that the District of Columbia should have been left out."

Argo Lodge Plans Installation and Banquet Tomorrow

Argo Lodge of B'nai B'rith, the largest Jewish fraternal organization in Washington, will hold its annual banquet and installation of officers tomorrow night at the Mayflower Hotel. The officers of the newly formed women's auxiliary will also be installed.

The principal speaker will be Senator James Mead, of New York, and among the guests will be Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming and Representatives William I. Sirovich, of New York, Emmanuel Celler, of New York, Leon Sacks, of Pennsylvania and Adolph J. Sabath, of Illinois.

The new president of Argo Lodge, Seymour S. Cuthman, succeeds Dr. Ivy A. Pelzman. Mrs. Frances Gewirz is the first president of the auxiliary.

ship "if Mr. Noonan so advises."

"No subpena at Cristobal is necessary," he said.

His radiogram follows:

"This is third winter trip to Panama following two serious operations. Reservations were negotiated over six weeks ago. Had no notice, no knowledge about subpena. Will respond without it. It was physically impossible to leave ship last night. Wired Mr. Noonan accordingly and that our reservations return us March 6. Will this be satisfactory?

Manton Subpenaed

"Upon receipt of word from him will return from Cristobal on first ship available if Mr. Noonan so advises and needs me before March 6. No subpena at Cristobal is necessary."

John J. Dowling, Assistant United States Attorney, said he had sent Federal agents to Connecticut to subpena the personal business records of Thomas, including bank account transcripts, bank books and duplicate income tax returns.

Dowling said he was interviewing executives of concerns in which Manton had a financial interest and that a subpena had been issued for Manton to appear before the grand jury Monday after his resignation becomes effective.

Asked whether more Federal judges were being investigated under an order issued by Attorney General Frank Murphy a week ago, Noonan merely shrugged and said, "That's Government business."

Dowling, who was assigned to the Manton case, said, "A lot of interesting information is being developed. There is no telling where it will end."

Assigned Receivers

Dowling said he understand it was Thomas' custom to spend a vacation at this time of year in South America, but he added he was unaware of the judge's plans until sailing time.

Thomas last December appointed two receivers for McKesson & Robbins, Inc., following a receivership action which was later dismissed. That action began the series of developments which led to the many-sided investigations into the drug corporation's affairs.

Before his appointment to the bench by President Wilson in 1913, Thomas for 11 years was secretary and treasurer of the Democratic State Central Committee. He was one-time executive secretary to Democratic Gov. Simeon E. Baldwin. In 1899 he was a member of the General Assembly.

Manton, appointed by President Wilson, denied any wrong-doing after District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey accused him of accepting loans from litigants before his court. Manton has been on the Federal bench since 1916.

Widow Swears Schultz Told Her to Forget She Ever Met Hines; Avoids His Gaze at Trial

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—Soft-spoken words, by the widow of Arthur ("Dutch Schultz") Flegenheimer, slain czar of a $20,000,000-a-year gambling racket, today wove a background of secrecy around alleged meetings between her racketeer husband and James J. Hines, Tammany district leader.

Avoiding the gaze of the white-haired defendant, on trial for a second time on lottery and conspiracy charges, Mrs. Flegenheimer told the jury:

"My husband told me I should forget I had met Mr. Hines."

The meeting, she said under questioning by District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, took place in November, 1932, at "The Stable"—a Manhattan speakeasy where Schultz frequently held court with his henchmen.

The young widow, a former night club hat-check girl who said she married "the Dutchman" when she was 18, testified Hines stopped at the table where she was sitting with her husband. After she was introduced to the political leader, she said, Schultz and Hines went to the rear of the speakeasy for a talk.

Subsequently, she said she saw Hines and J. Richard ("Dixie") Davis, the Schultz mob's lawyer, together on several occasions.

In the first trial, Davis, who turned State's evidence after he was capurted in a Philadelphia hideout February 2, 1938, testified he was under orders from Schultz to pay Hines "any reasonable amount—not more than $1,000 a time" for serving as the racket's political "fixer."

Davis swore he paid Hines amounts ranging from $00 to $1,000 at frequent intervals over a period of several years.

Mrs. Flegenheimer, who did not testify in the first trial—which ended in a mistrial last September—said she accompanied Hines and Davis to a night club in 1934 and later went with them to a restaurant for a midnight supper.

She said her husband had been a good provider. He was shot to death in a Newark, N. J., beer tavern on the night of October 23, 1931. They had two children, Nancy, 5, and John, 4.

Citizens Ask Extension of Park Meters

Federation Reverses Stand, Convinced 'After Fair Trial'

Extension of parking meters in business sections throughout the District was approved last night by the Federation of Citizens Associations, reversing its previous policy of opposition. The federation met in the District Building.

In proposing the resolution Harry S. Wender, chairman of the committee on safety, said that "after a fair trial the old arguments against the meters have been shown to be false." His report also proposed that surplus revenue from the meters be used to establish municipally owned parking lots in the downtown section.

A previous stand adopted by the federation in 1936 opposed the meters. Only one vote was cast against last night's resolution.

Fear Emergency

Because of an "apparent danger of emergency" from settling of the Wilson Teachers College Building at Eleventh and Harvard streets northwest, the federation requested funds for preliminary work and starting of a new building at Thirteenth and Upshur streets, in addition to the $30,000 appropriation already approved by the Budget Bureau.

The federation also urged immediate appointment of a People's Counsel for the District to represent consumers' interests before the Public Utilities Commission. The post was vacated nearly three years ago.

Revaluation of the property of the Potomac Electric Power Co., with a view to reducing electric rates in the District, was supported by the group. In offering the resolution, William M. Clayton, chairman of the committee on public utilities, pointed out that "there exists today no valuation of the P. E. P. Co." as directed under the public utilities act.

Demand Proof on Cabs

Acting on a proposal from the West End Citizens Association to oppose changes in rates or zones of taxicabs, the federation demanded that the Public Utilities Commission give "strict proof" that "additional cost of operation is large enough to justify in itself any increase in the present rates."

L. A. Carruthers, president of the federation, was empowered to set up a committee to investigate liquor laws in the District. This action was taken following a proposal by the West End Citizens Association that only male employes be allowed to serve liquor.

The group took a stand deploring "inadequate heating and lighting in the public schools." "Deficiency appropriations which have already been submitted are the only answer," the resolution read.

A proposal that the requirements of residence for District Commissioners be changed from three to five years, was recommitted.

Two Masked Bandits Rob Motorman

Bandits again robbed a street car motorman last night, taking $18 and 120 tokens in a holdup at Fourteenth street and Maine avenue. Two other holdups, a robbery and a purse-snatching netted a total of $119.

Raymond Belfield, Capital Transit motorman, told police he was robbed at the Maine avenue terminal by two white men who wore handkerchief masks. Belfield, who is 26, lives at 723 Madison street northwest.

Two colored bandits took $19 in cash and a $50 Treasury check from Albert C. Allen, at his filling station at 241 Virginia avenue southwest.

Harry Schnitzer, an employe of the Holmes Bakery, 3900 block of Kansas avenue northwest, was robbed of $7 by an armed white man as he got in his truck parked in an alley beside his home. The bandit fled in a waiting auto.

Margaret Telbert, of 1131 Eighth street northeast, reported to police that her handbag containing $16 was stolen from a cleaning establishment at 1129 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, where she is employed as a clerk. Rosalie James, colored, of 53 L street northeast, told police two colored men snatched her purse containing $27 as she walked on L street near her home.

Professor Quiz Back in Capital, Where He Started

"Professor Quiz" last night returned to Washington, where the program first originated two years ago, and broadcast twice to the Nation from the studio in People's drug store, Eleventh and G streets, via WJSV and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The popular question-and-answer program, devised by John Heiney, then a Post employe and now with WJSV, after 20 local broadcasts from the Willard, was transferred to New York for a Nation-wide hookup. Last night "Professor Quiz" appeared in Washington again, first stop on his tour of the country.

First "Professor" was Jim McWilliams, a retired actor. Interrogator now is Craig Earl, doctor, teacher, actor and world traveler. Earl's wife, Betty, is scorekeeper. Bob Trout, the announcer, is a Washingtonian.

Civic Leaders To Give Dinner To Legislators

It's Just to Get To Know Them, Says Democratic Chief

A nonpartisan, good-will banquet at which Washington civic leaders will play hosts to approximately 100 members of Congress is being planned for March 7 at the Willard Hotel, it was learned yesterday.

Both Malcolm S. McConihe, Democratic National Committeeman for the District of Columbia, and Edward F. Colladay, the Republican National Committeeman, are playing an important part in arranging the get-together.

All the members of the Senate and House District committees and the Senate and House Appropriations committees would be invited, together with Vice President Garner and Speaker Bankhead.

"We feel that Washingtonians and the men who make the laws for the Nation and for the District ought to know each other better." said McConihe. "A better relationship would help all around. We are not, however, inviting the Senators and Representatives to tell them about our problems, but merely to break bread with them."

Dr. F. Thomas Evans, of the National Democratic League of Washington, is chairman of the committee arranging the banquet. McConihe is executive chairman. Other vice chairmen beside Colladay are Francis G. Addison, jr., president of the Washington Board of Trade; Robert V. Fleming, president of the Riggs National Bank; Corcoran Thom, president of the American Security & Trust Co.; Frank Hogan, president of the American Bar Association; Mrs. Harvey Wiley, prominent civic leader; Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, president of the League of Republican Women; John O'Rourke, managing editor of the Washington Daily News; Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, president of the Voteless League of District Women Voters; Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education, and John Locher, president of the Central Labor Union.

It is planned to enlist some 200 sponsors for the banquet, part of whom already have been enrolled.

Arlington Woman Hangs Herself

Mrs. Helen L. Bohler, 31, of 709 South Wakefield street, Arlington, Va., was found last night hanging in the attic of her home by her husband, Frank M. Bohler. Police said a clothesline had been used for a noose.

A verdict of suicide was returned by Dr. W. C. Welburn, county coroner.

Capital News in Brief

For the first time in his 27 years, Howard Wesley Monroe, colored, of 718 S street northwest, drove an automobile last night. He drove it into a stop sign and plenty of trouble.

According to police, Monroe was sitting in the automobile with two lady friends while its owner left it on a parking lot back of the District Building to perform a brief errand. Monroe turned on the heater, also starting the motor to work up a little heat.

Then Monroe reached toward the dash for the cigar lighter, his arm struck the gearshift lever and the car started down Thirteen and a Half street. It brought up against a stop sign at D street, where Private Robert Sandburg, of the traffic division, took a much frightened Monroe into custody for driving without a permit.

Brings 'Bacon,' Loses $60

While tightly hugging a bag of mutton chops which he didn't want to lose, "because they are very expensive," John Reade, of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, yesterday had his pocket picked of a wallet containing $60.

While waiting at Fourteenth and E streets northwest to board a street car, he was jostled by a tall colored man and later discovered his loss.

Robbery Suspect Held

Suspected of robbing a jewelry store at 1309 Connecticut avenue after smashing the plate glass window in front of the store, a 21-year-old man was arrested yesterday by Lieut. Joseph Shimon, chief of the pickup squad.

The suspect is thought to be the man who outdistanced Private W. W. Stiles in a chase earlier in the day when the window was broken. He is being held at Third Precinct station on investigation charges. A bracelet valued at $75 by the owners, Mrs. C. S. Card and Charles Osborne, has not been recovered.

Thursday night the Slavin jewelry store at 843 Seventeenth street northwest was robbed of $200 worth of jewelry after the window was broken.

Charm on the Way

Girls at American University got ready yesterday to launch their annual Charm School this week, while it was rumored men students planned a meeting to protest the movement as unnecessary.

Text books with such titles as "Designing Woman," "Your Carriage, Madam," and "Co-ediquette" will supplement laboratory experiments in technique. The girls will hear Dr. Grace Purse speak on "Stand Up and Charm," Dean Isabelle Farrington of the Chevy Chase School on "Personality on the Up," and other speakers discuss "Up With the Hair Do and Make-up" and "The Ups in Fashions."

The school, sponsored by the Cap and Gown Sorority, will be climaxed with a style show, charming co-eds serving as models.

Jewish Refugee Session to Hear Two Legislators

Representative Marcantonio (American Labor), New York, will speak at a meeting of the Jewish People's Committee today at 8 p. m. in the National Press Club auditorium. Other speakers include Representative Dickstein (Democrat), New York, and Rabbi Plotkin.

Tonight's meeting will open a two-day conference of the committee to study a plan of asylum in the United States for Jewish refugees from Germany. Other sessions will be at the Continental Hotel.

The committee will present to the President, the Vice President, Secretary Hull and members of Congress evidence supporting "the American principle of asylum." A petition with 250,000 signatures urging consideration of means to legalize aid to refugees from Germany will be presented to the President.

Budget Slash Deleted 291 District Jobs

Auditor Tabulates $800,000 Lopped Off From 1940 Estimate

When the Budget Bureau lopped off some $800,000 from the Commissioners' 1940 budget estimates a total of 291 new District jobs were lost in the shuffle, it was revealed yesterday.

It was learned from a tabulation compiled by District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan that the jobs lost included 50 for the health department, 69 in the public schools and 54 in the police department.

The Commissioners had requested 50 additional police for the service, a junior clerk, junior operator, junior laborer and a chauffeur. The combined salaries for these additions amounted to $100,280.

In the Health Department positions deleted by the Budget Bureau included 10 nurses and a supervisor, 11 physicians for the clinics, dental hygienist, physiotherapy aide, 15 hospital attendants for Gallinger and 2 head nurses at Glenn Dale.

A total of 56 public school teachers were deleted from the list. Nine inspectors for the different services were cut off. These included four building inspectors.

Other employes lost included: A new poundman, a clerk-stenographer for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, eight various jobs in the Public Utilities Commission, chief inspector of construction for the municipal architect, three additional telephone operators, seven principal guards at the District Jail, four jobs at the Zoo, and seven meter readers for the water department.

Although new positions formed a large basis of the budget reduction, money was also pared from increased salary requests for existing positions, new constructions and general improvements of the existing municipal facilities.

Pedestrian Rights to Be Fixed Tuesday

The District Commissioners on Tuesday will decide whether Washington's pedestrians will have to toe the mark with motorists.

A set of pedestrian-control regulations, approved and indorsed by the Traffic Advisory Council and subject of a lively public hearing last December, will form a major portion of the board's discussions on that day.

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal has already approved the regulations from a legal viewpoint.

The regulations are:

No pedestrian, equestrian or driver of any vehicle shall disobey the instructions of any official traffic sign or signal unless directed to do so by a police officer. Police officers shall have full power to regulate pedestrian, equestrian and vehicular traffic.

At intersections where traffic is controlled by signals or by police officers, drivers of vehicles shall yield the right of way to pedestrians crossing or those who have started to cross the roadway on a green or "go" signal.

No pedestrian shall use any roadway between intersections when a vehicle is approaching from either direction so as to constitute a hazard for his own safety or use the same at any time in a negligent or reckless manner.

The Advisory Council has recommended that the proposal dealing with motorists yielding the right of way to pedestrians already in the crosswalk be "rigidly enforced." Also recommended by the council is a provision for installations of pedestrian traffic lights "wherever practical."

William D. Foos, 81, G.P.O. Worker, Dies

William D. Foos, 81, lifelong resident of the District and an employe of the Government Printing Office for more than 40 years died yesterday at his residence, 1337 Twelfth street northwest, after a brief illness.

Mr. Foos was for more than 50 years a member of the Osiris Lodge of the Masonic Order. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Florence Foos, with whom he recently celebrated his fifty-seventh wedding anniversary, and two sisters, Mrs. Catherine Mullin, of this city, and Mrs. Bertha Jacobs, of Newport, R. I.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. Tuesday at the residence. Burial with Masonic ceremonies will be in Congressional Cemetery.

Grocer Is Found Dead by Daughter

Isadore D. Wiseman, 51, a grocer at 1304 Kenilworth avenue northeast, was found shot to death on the floor of his bedroom at 4506 Nash street northeast last night by his daughter, Edith, who rushed upstairs after hearing a shot. A revolver lay by his side.

Police said they found a note addressed to Wiseman's brother, Sidney, asking forgiveness. They said the note requested the brother to care for his four children, Edith, Ralp, Leon and Alec.

Dr. Moulton Wants A Planetarium Here

Dr. F. R. Moulton, permanent secretary of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, last night told the National Capital Amateur Astronomers Association, meeting in the National Museum, that Washington "could and should" have a planetarium.

Dr. Moulton was voted an honorary member of the association. Stephen Nagy, president, presided.

F. C. Trembley Rites Are Held

Funeral services for Frederick C. Trembley, 62, who died Wednesday at the home of a brother, Harold A. Trembley, 642 E street northeast, were held yesterday at Lee's funeral home. The Rev. C. S. Abbott, rector of Good Shepherd Episcopal Church, officiated and Masonic rites followed the service.

Mr. Trembley was born here in 1876, son of the late William L. and Helen H. Trembley. He was educated in Washington schools and for 18 years was employed at the Capitol power plant, retiring last November 1.

He was affiliated with Columbia Council, No. 3, R. and S. M. and Potomac Chapter, No. 8, Royal Arch Masons, and was a member of Pentalpha Lodge, No. 23, F. A. A. M. Surving are his brother and a niece, Helen Louise Trembley.

Renewed Fight on Subversive Alien Influences Demanded By James T. Brady, Legion's Departmental Commander

Speaks at Dinner Dance Given by Sergeant Jasper Post

Decrying subversive alien influences injurious to Americanism, James T. Brady, American Legion departmental commander, last night urged a continuation of "the legion's fight against alien groups."

At a dinner dance in honor of Daniel M. Goodacre, junior past commander of the Sergt. Jasper Post No. 13, at the New Colonial Hotel, Brady told 350 legionnaires and their guests that they should oppose foreign groups "boring from within" and declared such alien groups should be deported.

Brady complimented Goodacre for his organization work at the Jasper post last year when its membership rose to the highest mark for a District legion post in history.

Other speakers included John J. Keegan, commissioner of the United States Employes Compensation Commission; Godfrey L. Munter, former president of the District Bar Association; Hiram W. Hummer, commander of the Jasper Post; Joseph J. Malloy, national executive committeeman of the legion; Virginia McCarthy, president of the women's auxiliary of the Sergt. Jasper Post, and Ferdinand J. Fraser, past national chef de chemin-de-fer, "40 and 8." Mark T. Little was arrangements chairman.

Hearing on 7 Zoning Pleas Set for Feb. 15

Permit Asked for Community Houses at Conduit, Reservoir Rds.

An appeal to permit the construction of semidetached and community houses at Conduit and Reservoir roads is included in a list of seven petitions which the District Board of Zoning Adjustment will consider at a public hearing February 15.

The petition, signed by George N. Bell, asks permission to build the houses in an area which is part commercial and part residential.

Asks School Permit

Other cases listed are:

An appeal by Raymond K. Espey and Franklin W. Harper for permission to use premises at 1615 Manchester lane northwest, as a day school for children of pre-school age, and up to and including the fifth and sixth grades.

Appeal of the Skyland Apartments, Inc., for a variance from the side yard requirements of the "A" area district to permit construction of an apartment house and for a variance from the provisions of the definition of the word "building" to permit construction of the apartment development known as "Skyland" at Twenty-fifth street and Good Hope road southeast.

Appeal of Alice Proctor for permission to change a nonconforming use from a grocery store to a dinner kitchen at 2531 P street northwest.

Addition Sought

Appeal of Cora E. Traylor and Leona K. Nash for a variance from the rear yard requirements of the C area district to permit the construction of a rear second-story addition to premises at 1819 Tenth street northwest.

Appeal of Oscar and Pauline Weistock for permission to change a nonconforming use from a restaurant to a delicatessen and grocery store at 6840 Georgia avenue northwest.

Appeal of F. A. Blunden Co., agents for Harry and Ethel Pratt, owners, for permission to change a nonconforming use from a tailor shop to include a hand laundry, cleaning and tailoring shop, 215 Twelfth street southeast.

Jewry Faces Dark Future, Forum Told

A gloomy picture of the situation confronting world Jewry was painted last night by Dr. Abram L. Sachar, historian and scholar, in an address to the Nation Jewish Forum at the Jewish Community Center.

"Not since the Middle Ages has there been anything to compare with the organized persecution of the Jews in central and eastern Europe," Dr. Sachar said.

"Even in the days of the Czars and the pogroms in Russia the Jew was better off," he said, "for the Czars disclaimed responsibility. Today the attacks come from the heads of states, from those who represent law, from those to whom oppressed groups should look for help."

Wave of Defeatism

As a result of this wave of anti-Semitism, Dr. Sachar said, a pall of defeatism has settled over Jewish life, manifested among some elements in a refusal to bear children.

The Jews of Europe have little to hope for, Dr. Sachar pointed out, because they are tied up with the doomed middle class. In Communist countries and in Fascist states, the bourgeoisie is doomed to extinction, he said.

Safety Valve Cut Off

The most important date in modern Jewish history is 1924, Dr. Sachar said, for that year the Johnson immigration bill was passed cutting off the safety valve for hopes of Jewish survival in Europe.

"It isn't only a Jewish problem," he added. "It is tied up with world economy. The struggle for existence in countries like Poland and Rumania has become so difficult that the governments have been forced to look for scapegoats to appease the growing social restlessness. The Jew happens to be a handy scapegoat."

Father Connors, China Leprosarium Founder, Dies

When the Rev. Francis J. Connors founded a Catholic leper asylum in South China 11 years ago he resigned himself to an ultimate leper's death at the colony. Friday, however, he succumbed after an abdominal operation in a Philadelphia hospital.

News of the death of the 38-year-old priest reached Washington yesterday through William F. Carlin, of 828 Sliga avenue, Silver Spring, Md., a boyhood companion of Father Connors and his host here three months ago on the first visit Father Connors had made since he founded the leprosarium in 1928.

Father Connors was a graduate of Catholic University. A native of Peabody, Mass., he went to China in 1927, the year after his ordination. He leaves his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Timothy J. Connors, and two brothers and two sisters.

Michael J. Maher Rites Tomorrow

Funeral services for Michael J. Maher, 70-year-old proofreader for the Evening Star who died Friday, will be held at 9 a. m. tomorrow in the Church of the Nativity. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Mr. Maher had been employed by the Star since 1897. Previously he had worked for various printing firms. He was a native of Washington.

Surviving Mr. Maher are his wife, Mrs. Emma L. Maher, of 6104 Fourth street northwest, and a sister, Miss Sarah H. Maher.

Presbyterian Meeting

The Presbyterian Ministers Association of Washington and vicinity will meet tomorrow at 11 a. m. at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Lawyers Urge Changes in U.S. Legal Setup

Seek 'Career Service' And Protection From Lay Officer Criticism

Changes in regulations covering employment of lawyers in the Government service to protect them from "uninformed criticism and lay supervisory "officers," were recommended in a report made public yesterday by the Federal Bar Association.

Development of "career service" for governmental lawyers, application of the classification act to all such legal employes, and a more efficient method of organizing Governmental legal work, were cited as specific objectives.

Approval of the recommendations by the rank and file of Federal lawyers, was reported by the committee which was selected to make the study, according to spokesmen for the association.

Ross Is Chairman

Chairman of the commitee was Thomas M. Ross, principal attorney, legal division, Interstate Commerce Commission. Other members were Kenneth G. Heisler, legal division, Home Owners Loan Corporation; William A. Roberts, former People's Counsel, District of Columbia, and Mastin G. White, solicitor of the Department of Agriculture.

Referring to supervision of lawyers by lay administrators, the report stated that the chief legal officer of a department or agency "'has, at most, only an advisory relation to the lawyers outside his own office staff. He ordinarily has only a slight knowledge of what other lawyers serving the department or independent establishment are doing and of the problems with which they are fronted. He is able neither to direct nor to supervise their work.

"The legal personnel stands in no different position from that of the lay personnel, the administrative official whom they serve being left to determine their rank as lawyers and whether they deserve employment, promotion, transfer or dismissal."

Urges Co-ordinated Setup

To offset this the committee recommended co-ordinated organization and direction, so that the chief legal officer would have the professional assistance of the entire legal staff. Under this system changes would be initiated by the chief legal officer, with the recommendation of his assistants, although finally approved by the administrative head. Thus, the committee pointed out, the professional independence of each attorney would be protected.

Such a system, coupled with a system of competitive merit appointments, with all lawyers subject to the classification act, but registered under a system whereby investigators would take into consideration the legal setup as a whole, would result, the committee suggested, in "a true career service for attorneys, resting not merely upon the grace of successive heads of individual departments or independent agencies."

U. S. Death Rate At Record Low; Births Increase

A general national death rate equal to the low record of 1933 and the lowest infant mortality rate ever recorded were indicated for 1938 yesterday in a preliminary report to Secretary of Commerce Hopkins by W. L. Austin, director of the census. The Nation's birth rate showed a slight increase, following a trend which was noted in 1936 after a steady decline.

The figures were described as preliminary, having been assembled under a new speed-up system initiated in 1937. This new reporting system, Austin explained, compiles data according to the number of certificates received in each State health office during each month rather than the number of births and deaths actually occurring during that period. A careful analysis of the 1937 data, comparing these with final 1937 figures, showed that the new type gives a surprisingly accurate approximation of the final national figures.

The preliminary death rate for 1938 was 10.7 deaths per 1,000 estimated population. The rate in 1937 was 11.2. The rate has dropped steadily since the bureau started collecting annual figures in 1900 when the rate was 17.6 per 1,000 estimated population.

Fraud Solicitor Warning Given

Warning against charity solicitors claiming to represent St. Ann's Orphan Asylum, Herbert Willett, jr., Community Chest director, yesterday urged all persons approached for donations to the institution's "annual campaign" to communicate at once with Chest headquarters or the Better Business Bureau.

A Chest agency, St. Ann's makes no separate campaign for funds, Willett pointed out, and relies on the consolidated Chest appeal each fall for all operating funds.

Museum Gets 2d Flag That Tripped Booth

Flag in Lincoln Museum

Flag from Ford Theater

Both Ensigns There, So Curator Lets the Public Take Its Choice

By Scott Hart.

The American flag that millions of school children were told tripped John Wilkes Booth after his assassination of President Lincoln has been acquired by the Lincoln Museum in Ford's Theater, on Tenth street.

At the museum neither the curator nor his staff will argue about it. They will only say: "'Here are the two flags, the American flag that school children were told tripped Booth in his leap from the President's box. Here is the Treasury guards' blue flag that some say tripped Booth in his leap from the President's box."

Which means that the museum has acquired both flags concerned in the 74-year-old controversy, and that the museum staff considers that since you haven't paid any money you can take your choice. The museum is free, the flags are there now and the hall is large enough to argue in.

Three Flags There

The first conclusion might be that all the flags aren't there. History and historical photographs show that two American flags and the Treasury guards' blue flag with white stars were on the President's box as patriotic decorations. The second American flag is believed to have been found.

In any event, despite the teachings in the schools, the Treasury guards' flag is held with great vigor by some to be the device that tripped the assassin in his leap to the stage. This flag since 1932 has been on display in the Museum, and tens of thousands of former school children have looked on the jagged rent in its border and wondered if what they learned in school was the bunk. It was an American flag that tripped Lincoln, they had been told.

Lines in the Books

The lines in the school books had been:

"The American flag, that stands for all that is noble, reached forth and tripped the assassin as he was escaping after his wicked deed, and due to the fall he was handicapped and later caught."

Now the museum staff can say: "Well, the American flag is in the case right there." It is in a bad state of preservation (which is not the fault of the museum), for it has come down a long way.

It was bought by the women clerks of the Treasury and presented to the Treasury guards, who were organized in the war days for the defense of Washington. The flag was lent to Ford's Theater to decorate the President's box. "The holes in the flag were caused by wear—not by the spur. His spur caught in the fringe, causing him to fall and break his ankle," says a legend long attached to the American flag.

Returned to Treasury

The morning after the assasination, April 15, 1865, it was returned to the Treasury and placed in the Secretary's office. Somehow, it got to the machinist's room in the basement. In 1871, Capt. H. A. Cobaugh, captain of the watch, placed it in his office, and there it stayed until Cleveland's election. Then the captain of the watch asked permission to have a case made for the flag. The key to the case was given Cobaugh, and three canes were made from the pole, one of these going to Capt. Cobaugh.

Now the museum has the flag. It had been in an upright position in the Treasury Building and the heavy gold braid gave weight to tear the fabric in many places. The museum is attempting to restore it.

The guards flag came in 1932 from Mrs. E. Palmer Gravit, of California. It is in good condition. But which flag tripped the assassin is still in doubt. The museum staff point inquirers to the two devices of argument, then to a collection of books in the information office.

Spur Gets Blame

One item says:

"There were two American flags which had been used on other occasions to decorate the State box, and in addition to these it was decided to send to the Treasury Department and borrow the Treasury regimental flag, a blue flag with white stars. This was draped in the center of boxes seven and eight, and the American flag was draped above; in the pillar in the middle a framed picture of Washington was hung. Impeded in his jump, which ordinarily would have been nothing to one of his athletic training, by Rathbone's clutch (Maj. Rathbone was in the box with Lincoln) Booth had caught his spur in the Treasury flag, gashed the frame of Washington's picture, and broken the small bone of his left leg in the heavy fall"—Clara E. Laughlin, "The Death of Lincoln."

Which is only another controversy, bringing the Father of His Country into the tripping of the assassin. It has also been argued in the museum, by the visitors, that the Guards' flag was suspended from the box to afford the right hazard to Booth's spur. The rent seems to have been made by a spur. But the school children were taught it was the American flag, visitors say also.

The two flags and the spur are there and the museum staff say they aren't arguing.

40th Carabao 'Wallow' Is Set to Music

Serenaded by a "G-string band," members of the famed Military Order of the Carabao last night made the rafters ring at the Willard Hotel in their traditional "Wallow" marking the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the order.

From the three "Corrals" of the order—Washington, San Francisco and Manila—ranking officials of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps gathered to "let down their hair" and talk.

The order is composed of officers in the three branches of military service, newspaper correspondents who served in the Philippine Islands between 1898 and 1913, "Companeros" who served in the Islands since 1913, and the oldest descendants of eligible officers.

Romantic Old Guard

The "Wallow" got underway with a procession of U. S. Marine Band members dressed as Filipinos playing the islands' native single-string instrument.

"It's a Long Way to Old Manila," sang the Carabaos, after a brief address of welcome by Rear Admiral George T. Pettingill, retiring grand paramount, and taking time out to hear remarks by Louis Johnson, assistant Secretary of War.

"You are the romantic old guard of the services and your achievements in song and battle have been perpetuated in the traditions of the Army and Navy," Johnson said.

He said the order is "properly conservative" but "could never become reactionary."

"In 1899, you were ready to change with the times. In 1939 you are just as eager to keep America's defenses abreast of world-wide developments in the art and science of warfare," said Johnson. "Keep up that spirit and you will keep America strong and yourselves young."

Highlight of the dinner came when lights were dimmed and the patron saint of the order, the Carabao bull, a soloist dressed as a Filipino, sang the "Carabao Hymn."

Installation of the "bcmbinero," a traditional officer who may at any time interrupt proceedings and call for liquid refreshment, followed.

In a skit showing how the Navy designs ships, the first design, strangely resembling a donkey, was ruled "too light" and likely to become "obsolete by 1940." The next design, resembling an elephant, was deserted when designers left the stage in confusion.

Contented Only When Wet

Accompanied by the Marine Band, directed by Capt. Taylor Branson, the Carabaos began early and staid late singing the old songs of the order—"Last Call of the Thirsty Carabaos," "The Carabao's King of Them All," and others. The order took its name from the Philippine Islands beast of burden, the Carabao bull, said to be contented only when wet.

Johnson, Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, and former Senator Jim Watson were main speakers at the "wallow." Col. Henry H. Sheen and Col. Edmund L. Bruber, of the Army general staff, were in charge of entertainment.

Col. A. H. Dondero headed the "sing table," Brig. Gen. R. H. Jordan, decorations, and Col. Joseph M. Heller, grand lead and wheel Carabao, general committee.

Carabaos and hombres present included:

A. S. Browne, D. C. Lawyer, Is Dead at 78

Funeral Services Set Tomorrow in St. Paul's Church

Arthur S. Browne, 78, prominent patent attorney, died Friday night at Sibley Hospital.

A native of the Capital, he was a graduate of Dartmouth College and George Washington University Law School.

BROWNE

In recent years Mr. Browne had been compelled by ill health to retire from active practice.

Past governor of the Patent Bar Association, he was a member of the American Bar Association, American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Oldest Inhabitants Association.

His clubs were the Cosmos and Chevy Chase, here; St. Botolph, Boston, Mass., and the University, New York City. He was a governor of the Episcopal Hospital and a member of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Mr. Browne, who made his home at Hampton Courts, 2013 New Hampshire avenue northwest, is survived by a brother, Walter A. Browne, of this city.

Funeral services will be held at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rock Creek Church road. The Rev. Franklin J. Bohanan, rector, will officiate.

Mrs. Ada Agniel's Funeral Is Today

Services will be held today at 5 p. m. for Mrs. Ada Lescher Agniel, 80, at the Hines funeral home, 2901 Fourteenth street northwest. She died unexpectedly Friday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lucille Calmes, of the Iowa Apartments.

A native of Mount Carmel, Ill., where her husband, the late George Agniel, was a breeder of race and harness horses, in Preston, Ind., Mrs. Agniel moved to Washington some time ago.

Besides Mrs. Calmes, Mrs. Agniel leaves another daughter, Miss Marguerite Agniel, dancing teacher; two sons, George F. Agniel, of this city, and V. W. Agniel, of Gaylordsville, Md.

Ambassador to Speak

Dr. Pedro Martinez Fraga, Cuban Ambassador, is among the speakers who will address the second convention of the Inter-American Bibliographical and Library Association, to be held here February 23 and 24.

Board of Trade Holds Golden Jubilee Dinner

Over 800 Attend; Five Given Honorary Life Memberships

The Washington Board of Trade, with 50 years of service and achievement to its credit, held a golden jubilee dinner in the Mayflower Hotel last night.

Gathered in the great ballroom were 800 members and an imposing array of guests, including statesmen, jurists, Federal and local officials, and men high in the business and professional world.

Honorary life memberships were presented to five men who have been members for virtually the entire half century of the board's history. They were Allen C. Clark, Dr. W. P. C. Hazen, Christian Heurich, Charles A. Langley and Theodore W. Noyes.

Only One Speech

There was a profusion of entertainment, but no speech-making except for the brief address of welcome by President Francis G. Addison, jr. He said:

"Tonight we are celebrating the Board of Trade's golden anniversary. For half a century this organization has served the people of Washington faithfully and well. It has been identified with nearly every important civic enterprise during that period. The fact that its membership is now made up of nearly 4,000 representative citizens is ample testimony to its usefulness and effectiveness.

To Continue Efforts

"The Board of Trade's successes and, in fact, the progress of Washington, are in a large measure dependent upon the co-operation of District of Columbia and Federal officials. To those distinguished guests from official life who have honored us by their presence here tonight we express our since appreciation, and pledge continued efforts toward the advancement of Washington, the Capital of a great Nation."

Ford

"The Quality Car In The Low Price Field"

—and what this means to you as a motor car buyer. It is not just an advertising slogan. It is a saying that grew out of the car itself and its service to owners. It is your guide to getting more for your money. Here are the reasons:

The Ford is "The Quality Car in the Low Price Field" because of its V-type 8-cylinder engine. Only Ford has found a way to make a car with a V-8 engine to sell at a low price.

The Ford is "The Quality Car in the Low Price Field" because it is built of exceptionally good materials. 63 different kinds of quality steel, many of them made in the Ford plant, are used in the building of Ford cars.

The Ford is "The Quality Car in the Low Price Field" because Ford pioneered fine craftsmanship in volume production, and insists upon rigid standards of precision manufacture. Ford owns and controls the manufacturing rights in North and South America for the famous Johansson gage blocks—world-wide accepted standards of measurement.

The final, distinguishing mark of "The Quality Car in the Low Price Field" is its modern design. Like the Lincoln-Zephyr and the Mercury, it has beauty of line and proportion which reflects the inner quality of the car.

We are not satisfied simply to build all the quality we can into our cars. We prove the fact that it's there. Probably no car is more thoroughly tested than the Ford.

For example, Ford alone has built a huge weather tunnel, where test cars must face the world's worst weather—endure sleet storms, sand storms, cloudbursts—in order that the Ford you buy may serve you well under every condition.

On three Ford "torture tracks," other test cars are literally driven to death over rocks, cobbles, concrete humps—then torn down to measure wear and to search for signs of strain.

No Ford car can leave the assembly line until its parts have passed 6350 separate gage inspections—many of them held to limits of one ten-thousandth of an inch.

We could save a lot of money by skimping on tests. But a car built without them wouldn't be a Ford car.

And we aim constantly to build a better car—a car that will give you more and more for your money. But you pay no more. Ford prices are still low—and even lower than they look, when you realize the desirable equipment they include.

Both construction and appearance prove that the Ford V-8 is "The Quality Car in the Low Price Field."

Chamberlain's Son Wins Promotion

London, Feb. 4 (AP).—Promotion of Frank Chamberlain, 27-year-old son of the prime minister, from gunner to second lieutenant in an anti-aircraft brigade, was announced tonight in the London Gazette.

Young Chamberlain was the target recently of Irish Republican agitators when a bomb exploded at the rear of a hotel at Tralee, County Kerry, in western Ireland.

Planes to Move Troops in Next War

Special Cable to The Post.

Paris, Feb. 4.—Marshal Henri Phillips Petain, highest ranking member of the French superior war council, predicted today that in the coming war thousands of soldiers would be transported from sector to sector by large squadrons of autogyros.

"When that day comes," Petain said, "the airplane will give its answer to those who now say that the plane is useful for bombing or machine-gunning, but of no value when it comes to the occupation of enemy territory." He spoke at the opening session of a new two-year course in national defense being given here for young politicians.

Mother Gone, Child Opens Gas, 3 Die

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Feb. 4.—Mrs. Alice Flanagan, 31, mother of five children, left the four younger ones alone for the first time Friday, in the family's four-room Brooklyn bungalow, so she could take her oldest child, Matthew, jr., 6 to be registered for his first day at school.

In her absence one of the other children opened four jets of the kitchen gas stove. When the mother returned, three of the children were dead and the other was unconscious, but will survive.

Lawrence Underwood Dies

Hollywood, Feb. 4 (AP).—Death of Lawrence Underwood, 68, veteran stage and screen actor, writer and director, in a hospital Thursday was disclosed today. He was born in Albia, Iowa, and is survived by his wife.

Spain's Art Treasures Sent to Geneva

Perpignan, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Feb. 4 (UP).—Forty trucks bearing Spain's chief art treasures began crossing the frontier late Friday en route to Geneva where they will be kept by the League of Nations until the Spanish war ends.

Mayor Casademon of Perthus gave the treasures free customs passage. Directors of principal European art museums including the National Art Gallery of London and the Louvre Museum of Paris accompanied the trucks.

The loyalist government insisted only the treasures be returned after the war to the then existing government of Spain as the heritage of the Spanish people. This provision was made "to prevent the possibility of Germany or Italy taking some of the works in payment of war material sent to the insurgents."

Changes in Air Force Approved by Hitler

Berlin, Feb. 4 (AP).—Chancellor Hitler Friday approved organizational charges in Germany's air force which an official announcement said would mean "a further decisive advance in building up the air force through the closest co-operation of all elements." Marshal Goering suggested the changes, which actually went into effect February 1.

C. U. Ringmen Win From Weakened Duke, 6-2

Fernandez Gets Decision In Feature

Blue Devils Forced To Forfeit 2 Bouts; Bunsa, Stanges Win; Two Matches Drawn

By Jack Munhall.

With the unexpected aid of that invisible old one-punch artist, Hard Luck, which delivered lethal blows to a pair of Duke fighters causing their forfeitures, Catholic University's mittmen helped themselves to their second victory of the season last night, walloping the Blue Devils, 6 to 2, before 4,000 fans at Brookland.

Only a slight favorite in pre-match forecasting, the Cardinals became prohibitive favorites before they had donned a glove when Ed Morel, the Blue Devils' slugging 165-pounder, and Joe Sullivan, their light heavy, fell victims of hard luck and were unable to appear.

Morel, a star of Duke's Rose Bowl eleven, was summoned home just three-quarters of an hour before ring time to the bedside of his father, injured seriously in an automobile accident in Prince George, N. Y. Sullivan was forced to idle because of a cold and high fever.

Duke had a substitute for Sullivan, a fellow named Orville Vincent, but he was still A. W. O. L. at press time.

Stant in Exhibition

Fred Stant, C. U.'s co-captain and 165-pound ace, and James Turner, were the Cardinals who were returned winners by the twin forfeits. Stant, however, got into action in an exhibition match against Jerry Strang, a teammate, and the pair put on one of the best fights of the night, which wasn't difficult. With the exception of the lightweight class, which pitted Nestor Martinez, C. U.'s clever little southpaw, against Capt. Charles Kasik, of Duke, the bouts were danced in three-quarters time and failed to enthuse the capacity crowd.

Martinez, incidentally, was very fortunate to earn a draw with the hard-hitting and seasoned Duke leader, for he appeared a sure loser going into the third round. A brisk rally, however, drew him a majority draw decision. Only Denny Hughes of three judges voted for Duke.

Catholic's other winners were Ricardo Fernandez, swarthy Puerto Rican 120-pounder making his first fight; Middleweight Joe Bunsa and Heavyweight Julius Stanges. William Gearon, at 145-pounds, could get only a draw with Robert Little.

Duke's only winner was Falson Jordan, who outpointed Leonard Bartone in a 127-pound bout.

Bout Interesting

The most interesting fight of the card developed when the wild-swinging Fernandez hooked up with Duke's Louis Fracher, a tall, skinny, blond kid, who absorbed right-hand punches like a sponge sops water. By far the better boxer, Fracher would chase Fernandez all over the ring, when all of a sudden up from the third row ringside would come the Puerto Rican's right hand to land on the side of his face with a dull splat.

During one stretch in the second round Fernandez connected with this punch seven times in quick succession, leaving a blotchy red mark on the Blue Devil's face and neck.

Fernandez, who went out for the boxing team just for the exercise, got his chance through the recent ineligibility of Dave Bernstein and consented to the appearance only after hours of pleading by Coach LaFond.

EXHIBITION—Fred Stant and Jerry Strang (C. U.) fought to no decision.
120-POUND CLASS—Ricardo Fernandez (C. U.) outpointed Louis Fracher, 3 rounds.
127-POUND CLASS—Falson Jordan (Duke) outpointed Leonard Bartone, 3 rounds.
135-POUND CLASS—Charles Kasick (Duke) drew with Nestor Martinez.
145-POUND CLASS—William Gearon (C. U.) drew with Robert Little.
155-POUND CLASS—Joseph Bunsa (C. U.) outpointed Joseph Gardner, 3 rounds.
165-POUND CLASS—Fred Stant (C. U.) won on forfeit from Ed Morel.
175-POUND CLASS—James Turner (C. U.) won on forfeit from Orville Vincent.
UNLIMITED CLASS—Julius Stanges (C. U.) outpointed Louis Brooks, 3 rounds.

A Disputed Ball—and Out of Bounds—as Wilson Lost

Wilson players (in white jerseys) are interested spectators. Lower—Gaw, of Wilson (6) and Ritter (2), of the visitors, end up in a heap as they scrambled for a ball that ended up out of bounds. Wyomissing 57-43 Winner Over Wilson

Drawing away in the final quarter with a 27-point attack, Wyomissing Teachers College defeated Wilson Teachers, 57 to 43, yesterday on the Wilson court in a rough battle that included three technical fouls on the visitors, two of which were called on Coach John Kubacki.

The visitors jumped into a 9-5 lead at the first quarter and drew away by a 22-13 count at half-time. Wilson rallied in the third period and took the lead, 29-28, but Johnson, Miller and Kurowski paced the winner's final-period spurt that broke Wilson's current streak of six victories in their last seven games.

Charlie Clark, high-scoring ace of the hosts, boosted his average with eight field goals and seven foul shots for 23 points, while Johnson's 15-point total led the visitors.

Patty Berg, 'Dot' Kirby Enter Finals

Two Girls Meet Today In 36 Holes Finals of Miami Golf Tourney

By the Associated Press.

Coral Gables, Fla., Feb. 4.—Playing at the peak of her game, red-haired Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, today swept Laddie Irwin, of Glen Ridge, N. J., out of her path to a fourth straight victory in the Miami Biltmore Golf Tournament. She meets Dorothy Kirby, of Atlanta, in the 36-hole final tomorrow.

The freckle-faced national champion had a nine-hole card of 36, one over men's par and four under women's, as she trounced the 18-year-old Jersey girl, a close friend, 7 and 5, in the semifinal. Patty lost only one hole.

Miss Berg had six birdies, four of them in a row, and played every other hole in par. Miss Irwin matched two of Patty's birdies and scored a third herself, but she lacked the consistency to cope with her opponent's long woods and deadly approaches.

Miss Kirby, who won the qualifying medal with a 79 to tie the course record for her sex, also shot sub-par golf in a see-saw match with Ellamae Williams, of Chicago, which ended in a 3-and-2 victory.

Michigan Hits NBA Ranking Of Galento

'I Can Beat Galento, Myself,' Explains 128-Lb. Board Head

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Feb. 4.—Frank McDonell, chairman of the Michigan athletic board of control, described as "silly" tonight the National Boxing Association's recent ranking of Tony Galento as No. 1 contender for Joe Louis' heavyweight title, and imposed restrictions on future bouts of Galento here.

At the same time he barred from further competition in the State Natie Brown, veteran Washington (D. C.) boxer who dropped to the canvas ten times before being counted out in the fourth round of a fight with the 234-pound Orange (N. J.) tavern keeper here last night.

"It was disgusting" said MacDonell. "Brown is all washed up and I don't believe that Galento can lick me."

The boxing commissioner, who say he weighs 128 pounds, explained Galento's status this way:

"Galento will have to win a fight from an outstanding fighter in some other State before I shall allow him to appear in Michigan again, and then it will be only against a topnotch opponent."

MacDonell's suspension of Brown is effective only in Michigan because the athletic board was suspended by the N. B. A. last September 12 for refusing to recognize bans the Illinois boxing commission slapped on Jimmy Adamick, Midland, Mich., heavyweight; Jack Trammell, Youngstown, Ohio, fighter; Promoter Jack Kearns, Thomas Walsh and James Brady, all of whom were associated in the management of Adamick, and James Buchanan, Trammell's manager. The men were suspended after Adamick knocked out Trammell in Chicago last June 8.

New York Rangers Win

Toronto, Feb. 4 (AP).—The New York Rangers packed too much power for Toronto tonight and trimmed the Maple Leafs, 4 to 2, in the first game of their home-and-home National Hockey League series. A crowd of 13,518 saw the Leafs lose their second game in succession.

Penn State Wins

Philadelphia, Feb. 4 (AP).—Scoring 16 straight points at the start of the second half, Penn State came from behind tonight to beat Pennsylvania, 34-21, before a crowd of 5,000. It was Penn's sixth consecutive defeat.

Bulla, Nelson Lead Phoenix Golf With 68s

Walper Far Back With 79 as Rain Hampers Linksmen

By the Associated Press.

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 4.—Johnny Bulla, husky 24-year-old Chicago professional, and Byron Nelson, veteran from Reading, Pa., carded 68's to lead a field of 78 storm-tossed golfers at the conclusion of the first 18 holes in the $3,000 Phoenix Open tournament today.

The rain-soaked course earlier had proved the undoing of some of the Nation's leading linksmen.

The crowd was on the verge of acclaiming Bulla when Nelson, member of the 1937 Ryder Cup team, pulled up to the eighteenth tee with a 63. Informed he would have to par the five-stroke hole. Nelson nochalantly went ahead to tie Bulla.

Leo Walper, Washington, D. C., professional, was too far back to finish in the money barring a pair of miraculous rounds with a 39, 40—79, eight strokes over par.

Walper started with bogeys on the first three holes of the rain-soaked layout and then matched par for six holes for a three over regulation 36 on the out nine.

The District pro missed par by a shot on 11, 13 and 16 and then ran into real trouble with a two over par 6 on the seventeenth. He finished with a par 5 on the eighteenth for a 79, and played some fine approach shots to total the sub-80 score. The water-soaked greens, that made putting a risk, left Walper without a birdie.

Dizzy Dean's Pa Takes Bride After One-Day Courtship

Dallas, Tex., Feb. 4 (AP).—Albert M. Dean, father of baseball's famed Diz and Paul Dean, was wed today. The elder Dean took as his bride Mrs. Mattie Sandifer, who like himself has been widowed for 20 years. The couple was married after a one-day courtship. He is 65 years of age.

"I promised to do the cooking and the housework," said the new Mrs. Dean, "and to be pleasant. I am a good cook. He promised to make a good living and to buy me a car. But I haven't gotten the car yet."

Two World Records Smashed In Annual Millrose Games

By the United Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—Two world records were shattered and upsets followed upsets tonight in the thirty-second annual Millrose track and field games before a crowd of 16,000 in Madison Square Garden.

The three big stars of the meet were tireless Glenn Cunningham, who won the classic Wanamaker mile for the sixth time in seven starts; Roy Staley of the Southern California A. A., creater of a world record of 7.3 seconds in the 60-yard high hurdles and John Borican, Elberon, N. J., Negro who shaved 4.6 seconds from the two-third mile mark, one of the oldest on the books.

Borican won the event in 2:39, breaking the record of 2.43.6 set in 1923 by James J. Connolly of Georgetown University in the same meet.

Also sharing the spotlight was Herb Thompson, of Jersey City, who equalled the world record of

Art Bryant Stops Raisin and Earns Draw for Cavaliers

Cronin and Alperstein Take Bouts For Old Liners; Dorr and Bradley Lose; Barksdale, Virginia, Stops Opponent

By Lewis F. Atchison.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 4.—In a gruelling, grimly-contested match that saw favorites fall with almost monotonous regularity, the University of Virginia and Maryland ring teams punched their way through eight bruising bouts to a 4-to-4 stalemate tonight before 5,000 fans.

Virginia's previously undefeated ace, Truman Southall, succumbed to the cool, staccato-like sticking of Maryland's sensational rookie, Frank Cronin, in the 155-pound class, and this not wholly unexpected result was the turning point of what threatened to be a dismal evening for the visitors. From there the Terrapins fought their way in to a 4-3 lead, dropping back to even terms with their host as Art Bryant, knocked out Maryland's Herman Raisin in the heavyweight bout.

Until Cronin banged his way to victory over Southall, Maryland seemed doomed to defeat for Red Dorr and Bob Bradley, its 120 and 127-pounders, respectively, were the unwilling victims of a couple of dubious decisions that put their mates at a disadvantage at the very outset.

Dorr Appeared Best

Both Dorr, who fought Platon Gailey and Bradley, who came to blows with Virginia's Ben Jacobs, won by a comfortable margin on The Post's score sheet, but Referee Elder Kraft gave the nod to Gailey and awarded Jacobs a draw in his match. Kraft and The Post sheet again were at variance in the light-heavyweight engagement, which he called a drawn, and The Post scored for Virginia.

Two knockouts featured the slugging, both credited to Virginia. Ashby Barksdale, fighting in the 145-pound division, won by a technical knockout from Nathan Askin in the second round of their bout, after softening up his man with a smoking right hook to the solar plexus. With only five seconds of the round to go Askin might have continued, but it was plainly only a matter of time until Barksdale caught him with the finishing punch.

Piano-plunking Bob Bradley, Maryland's 127-pounder, fought a savage draw with Virginia's Ben Jacobs in a bout that saw both boys swinging from their heels throughout.

Ben Alperstein, intercollegiate featherweight champion and Maryland's lightweight, chalked up his team's first point of the night, outpointing rugged Dick Williams in a fast go. The pair mixed it freely in the first round, which went to Alperstein by a good margin, and pawed their way through a fairly even second. Alperstein opened up in the third to clinch the decision, although he narrowly missed trouble when Williams tagged him with a potent left hook to the chin.

Southall Defeated

Truman Southall, Virginia's 155-pounder, suffered his first defeat of the season, and second in two years, at the busy fists of Maryland's Frank Cronin, the track star, serving his apprenticeship at boxing. Cronin, who is undefeated, was too fast, too cool, and too smart for his rugged opponent.

Newton Cox sent Maryland ahead for the first time during the match as he outpointed Ed Parker in the middleweight engagement.

Art Bryant, an Alexandria boy fighting heavyweight for the home team, put Herman Raisin down once in the first round and twice in the second to win by a knockout. He finished the Marylander after 1 minute and 53 seconds of target practice in the second round.

Summaries:
120 POUNDS—Gailey (Va.) defeated Dorr, decision.
127 POUNDS—Jacobs (Va.) and Bradley, draw.

Terp Quint Is Stopped By N. C. State

Wolfpack Ring Up 46-40 Victory in Extra Period; 3,000 See Fierce Game

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 4.—North Carolina State's Red Terrors upset a favored University of Maryland, 46-40, in an overtime Southern Conference basketball game here tonight before 3,000.

Tied in the last ten seconds at 36-36 by a follow-up shot by Selby Jones, the game was a see-saw affair all the way.

This same Jones sank three similar shots in the free-scoring extra period in which 14 points were scored.

Maryland led at half time 21-19 and finally managed to go ahead again at 4½ minutes to go when George Dewitt sank a field basket.

Coach Burton Shipley started four members of his second team, but rushed his varsity into the fray after 10 minutes had elapsed.

Brilliant Jim Rennie, State guard, led the scoring pace with 16 points, being tied in field baskets at seven by co-Captan Bill Mann, who aided Jones in the extra-period scoring barrage.

The victory gave State another leg on its determined bid for a berth in the Southern Conference Tournament here March 2, 3 and 4. Experts say two triumphs in the remaining league games will see the Terrors in. Tonight's was the first loss Maryland has suffered on its three-game invasion of the Old North State.

Ohio State Defeats Gophers, Take Lead

Minneapolis, Feb. 4 (AP).—Ohio State moved into undisputed possession of first place in the Western Conference basketball standings here tonight by nosing out the Minnesota Gophers, 31 to 30, in an exciting over-time duel.

A free throw made by Richard Baker, forward—with a little more than two minutes of the five-minute overtime period remaining—spelled victory for Ohio State after the end of the regular playing time found the two teams in a 30-30 deadlock.

Battling Bettina Keeps His Word; Brings Home Bacon

By the United Press.

Beacon, N. Y., Feb. 4.—Melio Bettina, young light-heavyweight who is recognized as the world's champion by the New York State Boxing Commission, promised to bring home the bacon to Beacon, his home town. He did it literally tonight.

Melio alighted from the train with a 5-pound bacon box which also carried pictures of Tiger Jack Fox, the Negro boxer he knocked out the night before at Madison Square Garden.

A crowd of 10,000 saw Bettina carried on the shoulders of admirers to an open car. The group then paraded up Beacon's main street with four bands blaring and torch-lights lighting up the sky. Melio officially presented the bacon with Fox's pictures to Mayor Robert Pugsley at a reception in the Beacon Elks Club.

The police force of 19 kept the crowds in line.

Sam West Signs Nat Contract, Leaving Only 4 Out of Fold

Buddy Myer DeShong and Appleton Out

Estallela Expected To Sign Soon; Pay Cuts Cause Two Pitchers to Balk

The persuasive powers of Clark Griffith yesterday netted the signed contract of Outfielder Sammy West and reduced to four the number of unsigned Washington players.

Encountering less resistance than in any season in recent years, the Nats' owner has already whipped into line every member of the 1939 Washington cast with the exception of Buddy Myer, Jimmy DeShong, Pete Appleton and Bobby Estallela.

Conducting his negotiations from Florida where he is vacationing, Griffith confidently predicts that every player will have accepted terms before the time they are scheduled to report for training.

Contract difficulties were eased for Griffith by his trades of the winter which sent Al Simmons and Zeke Bonura to National League clubs. Simmons and Bonura have been annual headaches to club owners at contract time.

Balks Anticipated

Estallela's acceptance of terms is anticipated from day to day inasmuch as the little Cuban has never displayed any disposition to hold out, but the delay in signing by DeShong, Myer and Appleton was anticipated.

DeShong and Appleton are obviously protesting at the salary cuts contained in their 1939 contracts. DeShong, winner of only five games, and loser of eight, encountered his worst season in the majors last year and was subjected to a heavier salary slash than any other member of the team. He had been the second-highest paid pitcher on the club, Wes Ferrell drawing last year's top salary.

[DeShong is now serving on the grand jury investigating campaign charges against 14 Pennsylvania State Democratic leaders. He has asked Judge Paul N. Schaeffer at Harrisburg to release him from this duty in order that he may join the Washington club at its spring training camp, according to the Associated Press.]

Appleton's Pay Cut

Appleton, who had been given a wage increase in 1938 following his successful campaign of that season, was a distinct in-and-outer last year, and he, too, was handed a wage cut. Appleton, willing to accept a slash, is haggling over the size of the reduction.

The delay in signing by Buddy Myer has been occasioned by his desire for a larger increase than was contained in his 1939 contract. Myer, following a poor season in 1937, suffered a huge pay cut, but last year he staged a brilliant comeback, hitting .340, which landed him in sixth place among the league's sluggers. The little second baseman will be the highest paid member of the Nats next season, but he is reported holding out for the $15,000 salary he received after leading the league in hitting in 1935.

Appleton and DeShong will not be classified as holdouts unless they fail to accept terms by March 1, the date the veteran pitchers are scheduled to report to Orlando. Myer has been ordered to report on March 7, with the contingent of veteran infielders and outfielders.

Previous to the announcement that West's signed contract had been received yesterday, Secretary Edward B. Eynon, jr., of the Nats, announced that Pitcher Monte Weaver, Catcher Angelo Giuliani and Infielder Paul Pritchard had accepted terms.

Georgetown Girls Play RED Five

Georgetown A. C. girls, holding first place in the Washington Recreation Basketball League for Girls, lead the loop into action this week, playing the second-place Rural Electric Administration sextet tomorrow night at the Woodrow Wilson High gym. The game starts at 9 p. m.

Two other games are scheduled for the fifth week of competition this season. On Tuesday, four teams go into action, Hyattsville girls meeting Phil Body at Powell Junior High, and Jewish Community Center tangling with Bureau of Engraving.

League scorers will be gunning for the scoring record of Anna Honabach, tall center of the Georgetown sextet. She has scored 76 points in four games, and the next best scorer, Virginia Miller, is five points behind with 71. Miller plays for Mount Rainier, a team in third place in Section II of the league.

Armstrong-Montanez Match Now Planned

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Plans were under way today to have Henry Armstrong defend his world welterweight boxing championship March 31, against Pedro Montanez, the Puerto Rican, in Madison Square Garden.

If the match is made, it would mean the proposed Armstrong-Lou Ambers bout for the lightweight title, which Hammerin' Henry from Los Angeles holds, would not be put on until July or August.

It was learned that Promoter Mike Jacobs has been thinking over both July and August dates for the Armstrong-Ambers re-match (Henry won the 135-pound crown from Lou last year), and that he leans toward the August date, so that a proposed heavyweight championship fight for Joe Louis in June would not overshadow the lightweight battle.

Should the Armstrong-Montanez go be set for March 31, it would mean a proposed bout between Louis and Bob Pastor on the same date would be abandoned.

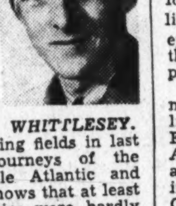
Tee to Green

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Tomorrow night's annual meeting of the District of Columbia Golf Association will conclude the midwinter gab fests of the local links organizations, and with dates and courses all set for the year's tournaments, the august gentlemen might well look to a method of boosting the entries as their next step.



WHITTLESEY.

A quick look at the starting fields in last year's major tourneys of the Maryland, Middle Atlantic and District Bodies shows that at least four of the affairs were hardly worth while playing from a standpoint of the participants. The Middle Atlantic Body was guilty on two occasions of attracting dismal fields, from a numerical standpoint at least, the District once, the District Open another, while the Maryland State had a commendable record.

For instance, the Middle Atlantic women's tournament drew only 26 players at the Rodgers Forge Club in Baltimore, an average of less than one each from its member clubs. For an association that includes Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia, with the cream of the crop of each State, the entry was woefully weak.

The same body faled to attract more than 13 boys for the junior tournament, although the age limit—21—is the highest of the three groups. The field was strong but for the hundreds of junior golfers in its members clubs, something is radically wrong.

The District Amateur field was nothing for the local executives to boast of, 36 players for the championship of the city, over the Congressional course. The District pros were also at fault, for the field of 19 that started in the District Open Championship.

It sems as though some method could be devised to put these tournaments on a par with other city and sectional events, that draw banner fields both in number and strength. A live-wire campaigner could build-up interest and not a single one of the associations should be content to send a list of entries that would be under 100, at a minimum.

The District Women's Golf Association did the best job, 120 entries for the second year in a row for the championship at Indian Spring. The Maryland State Amateur attracted 115 at Rodgers Forge, while their Women's tournament drew 52 starters, the junior 37 and open 63, that in comparison with the three times larger Middle Atlantic, was sensational.

The District junior field of 23 was representative, of the age limit, under 18. The Mid-Atlantic's entry of 76 at Charlottesville was the only one falling near the successful catagory.

The complaint of the officials of the various tournaments is that competitive golf is dying in Washington and vicinity. If so, the associations alone are to blame, they're performing the obsequies.

Mel Shorey, East Potomac professional, has turned promotor and has a letter in the mails for the United States Golf Association's public links committee inquiring as to the possibilities of forming a Middle Atlantic Public Links Golf Association, with an eye on a tournament program that would be the biggest municipal expansion in local history.

Shorey and Tommy Doerer, Jr., manager of the downtown public links layout, plan a union of the East Potomac, Rock Creek and Anacostia courses here; Mt. Pleasant, Clifton Park and Forest Park, in Baltimore, and Laurel and Glenwood in Richmond, with other courses like Purcellville, Allview, etc., on a semipublic basis, eligible for membership.

The clubs have team matches now, with from 20 to 40 man teams for home-and-home matches, and a league could be formed with little difficulty that would lead to Middle Atlantic Public Links Amateur, Junior, Women's, Team and other championships.

It is more than a pipe dream and with an active officer in each city, the proposition could demand a great deal of attention. The idea is more or less an answer to the Maryland State's refusal to accept the Baltimore public links as member clubs.

Shorey and Doerer cited that despite the fact that they were outnumbered by the private clubs, the municipal course individual membership was much greater, and there is no serious obstacle to the proposal, as with organized handicaps, etc., their next problem would be limiting the fields for competition.

Tommy Doerer, pointing out that the pay-as-you-play courses were the only ones located in the District soil, they could take over the District Open, and make it a better tourney.

The idea is one of many that have come from the publinks moguls of late, but to this department it seems to be one with an excellent chance for success.

Joe DiMaggio Awaits Offer From Yankees

Brother Says Star Hasn't Talked Terms With Club

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Feb. 4.—Joe DiMaggio wasn't available for an interview today, or yesterday either for that matter, but his brother Tom took occasion to deny reports that the Yankee outfielder was a baseball holdout or anything resembling such a thing.

Tom, manager of Joe's restaurant, usually knows what is going on. He declared, vigorously, that Joe had not opened negotiations with the New York club's management in an effort to recover the $1,850 deducted from last season's salary for missing the first ten days of the schedule.

"That ain't so," said Tom, punctuating it with considerably stronger language. "Joe hasn't even been in touch with the club. He hasn't even talked with anybody outside the family about his contract. He's going to let the club give out any announcements about him this year."

Brows Play 30 Games

St. Louis, Feb. 4 (AP).—The Browns ought to know the Philadelphia Nationals pretty well by the time the spring training season is over. The St. Louis American League team's schedule, released today, showed 13 of its 30 exhibition games are with the Phillies.

The Browns will meet three other National League teams, playing two games with the Pittsburgh Pirates, six with the Chicago Cubs and two with the St. Louis Cardinals in the annual city series. No games with American League clubs are on the schedule.

Pitchers and catchers will report at the Browns' San Antonio, Tex., training camp March 1, the remainder of the squad showing up five days later.

Phils Play A's Series

Philadelphia, Feb. 4 (AP).—The Phillies announced today a spring training schedule of 32 games, opening with the St. Louis Browns on March 11 and ending with a two-game city series against the Athletics April 15-16.

Pitchers and catchers were ordered to report to New Braunfels, Tex., on March 1. Infielders and outfielders are due March 6.

Hoag Signs Contract

St. Louis, Feb. 4 (AP).—Myril Hoag, outfielder obtained by the St. Louis Browns in a trade with the New York Yankees earlier in the winter, has signed his 1939 contract, the Browns' office announced today. The salary figures were not given.

P. Waner, W. Ferrell Meet Today for Golf Crown

Lakeland, Fla., Feb. 4 (AP).—Batteries for tomorrow's golf game—Paul Waner, the slugging outfielder of the Pittsburgh Pirates, and Wesley Ferrell, pitcher for the New York Yankees.

They will play 36 holes of "blood and money" golf for the title in the annual Baseball Players' Tournament.

It'll be for blood because Waner is defending the title he won last year at Sarasota and Ferrell, who won in 1937 and broke three clubs when he lost last year, is out to fan the left-handed Pirate.

It'll be for money because the two are wagering a sizable chunk of next season's pay on the outcome.

Ohio Tankmen Set World's Record

Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 4 (U.P.).—An Ohio State University 800-yard breastroke relay team set a new world's record today in an exhibition race as Ohio defeated Wayne University, 56 to 28, in a dual meet.

Johnny Higgins, Olympic breast stroke star, swam the first leg of the relay while simultaneously winning the 200-yard breatstroke event. Al McKee, Earl Chesler and Bob Johnson followed in the other legs of the record-breaking relay to smash the University of Michigan's week-old mark by almost 6 seconds. Ohio State's time was 10:08.6 compared to the Michigan time of 10:14.4.

Groves Is Winner In Trapshoot

Shattering 44 out of 50 disks in Class A competition, J. R. Groves, jr., and Julius Marcey tied for first place in the Washington Gun Club shoot yesterday over the Benning traps. Class B shooters were paced by Ray Sunderland.

In a shoot-off, Groves took individual Class A honors and also took another event at handicap distance. Following are the scores:

West Virginia Mountains Produce U. S. Batting King

By the Associated Press.

Durham, N. C., Feb. 4.—For the second consecutive year, the city of Beckley, W. Va., high up in the mountains, has produced the batting leader of all organized baseball. He is Shortstop Murray Franklin who compiled an impressive batting average of .439 while playing in the Mountain State League during the 1938 campaign.

Minor league headquarters here announced that this figure was tops in professional ball and that Franklin had won the annual Louisville Slugger Trophy, an actual-size sterling silver bat.

Last year Outfielder Earl Farley Martin, of Beckley, won the trophy with an average of .400. Franklin's mark is the highest that has been recorded since the trophy was first offered in 1934. The youngster, who has had only two years of professional experience, goes to Beaumont of the Texas League this season.

At the same time, minor league press headquarters announced that Cyril (Butch) Maron, first baseman of the Rogers club of the Arkansas-Missouri League, had won the Spalding Trophy for rookies. Moran batted .302 to set the pace for all first-year players in the minors. He is to receive a silver trophy.

Rules of the awards required that the players participate in at least 7? per cent of their team's games to become eligible. The trophies will be engraved and presented to the winners during ceremonies which will precede some home game of their 1939 teams.

South Atlantic Swim Tourney Here Saturday

Central "C" Club Sponsors Event at Shoreham Pool

Entry blanks for the South Atlantic High School Swimming Championships, to be staged by the graduate "C" Club of Central High, were issued yesterday to high school tankmen throughout the section. The meet will be held at the Shoreham's Venetian Pool, Saturday, February 25, at 8 p. m.

Schoolboy tankmen who wish to enter the races planned have until February 18 to get their entries to the committee. Each entry must be vouched for by a student's principal and coach.

Rules of the contest, regarding entries, are as follows: A swimmer must be less than 21 years of age at the time of the meet, and he must be registered in any recognized high school of Maryland, the District, Virginia, West Virginia, or North Carolina. His scholastic standing must also be good. No contestant may enter more than two events, and no school may enter more than one medley relay race and one free style relay team.

All events excet the 50-yard free-style race will be judged on comparative times. The 50-yard sprint will require heats and a final race.

27-25 Victory To St. John's

The spectacular basketball career of St. John's Prep cagers continued yesterday on the Johnny court, when the host team came from behind in the final period to eke out a 27-25 victory over Mount St. Joseph's of Baltimore. So far the Johnnies have lost only one game this season, winning 10.

The Mounts quickly jumped into a lead as the game began, holding a 7-4 lead after one period. They extend it to 21-16 by intermission time. During the third period there was only one basket scored, and that was by Joe Corrado, Johnnie forward. Mount St. Joseph's went scoreless.

In the final period, St. John's began the sort of rally that has made it the most talked of team in the city. Corrado, Joe Gallagher and Martin Hunt began hitting the loop, ringing up nine points while the visitors dropped only four.

Gallagher again took scoring honors with 10 points, though the Mounts' Trouato ran him a close second with nine.

Int'l Loop Adopts 154-Game Slate

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The International Baseball League today adopted a 154-game schedule, calling for the season to open on April 20.

The opening games will find Montreal at Baltimore, Toronto at Syracuse, Buffalo at Jersey City and Rochester at Newark. On May 4 the other cities will have their openings with the same teams opposing each other. The regular season will close September 10 and the Shaughnessy playoffs start two days later.

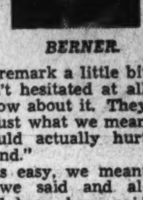
The roller skaters from whom the starting lineup for Capitol Casino will be chosen, are Reilly and Graham, left wings; Field and Leoffler, right wings; Weaver and Christoff, centers; Rogers and Roberts, right defences; Ritter and Zander, left defences; Stebbins and Shields, goalies.

Dogs . . .

By George Berner

Vicious Dogs

Several times within the past few years we have been reprimanded by readers for advising harsh treatment for snappy or vicious dogs.



BERNER.

Very recently in reply to a query concerning a dog which continually bites its mistress, we stated that we would undoubtedly knock it's block off. There are some readers evidently who didn't like this remark a little bit and they haven't hesitated at all in letting us know about it. They want to know just what we mean and if we would actually hurt "man's best friend."

The answer is easy, we meant exactly what we said and although it could have been said differently, perhaps more grammatically, we doubt if any phrase could have conveyed our sentiments regarding this type of dog more plainly. "Knock his block off," borders perhaps on the vernacular, but in good old American it has always meant a good sound thrashing, and that's just exactly what a biting dog needs. In our opinion when a dog bites he ceases at that moment to be "man's best friend." He certainly isn't our's if he has bitten us.

When a dog snaps at or bites a member of the household he should be whipped immediately and severely. By immediately we mean at the instant, not 30 seconds later, but immediately. By severely we mean that it should be administered so that he will remember it for the rest of his life. Don't club or kick him or you're little better than he is, but use your hand or a light strap and do it up brown. The size of the dog must determine the method applied.

Growling Pups

We have had several letters from readers recently asking how to stop their newly acquired pup from growling at them when he is eating. Some of them say they realize that this is perfectly natural, probably instinct to protect his food, but they are afraid he may bite someday. Instinct or not, it isn't necessary for him to protect his food now and he must be taught that fact quickly before he bites one of the children who happens to get too close to him while he is eating.

The best way to overcome this is too feed the pup or dog from the hand occasionally before setting his food on the floor. Take a little out of his dish when you have it all ready for him and let him take it from your hand. Then as you lower it to the floor slowly, keep taking some from the dish and hand it to him. Continue this for a few moments after you have put the dish on the floor. This should show him that no one is going to take his food and more drastic action will not be necessary.

If, however, he growls when you or some member of the family goes near him when eating, slap him hard, hard enough to roll him over a couple of times, and bawl him out plenty. You should be able to pick up his food at any time without his growling. If you can't, he isn't a safe dog to have around. One of the children, or perhaps the baby, may crawl upon him when he is eating and, not heeding his growl, get bitten.

Letters Expected

We're going to hear about this. We're going to get letters next week asking us if we condone cruelty, etc. We'll get letters of condemnation from so-called dog lovers, giving us fits for advising that dogs be whipped under these circumstances. They will tell us how they have never slapped their dogs, etc., and how anybody who whips "man's most loyal and trusting friend" should be jailed, and to all this we will say, "Phooey."

There is no one who loves, admires and respects a good dog more than we do, and most of you folks reading this love dogs too, or you wouldn't be reading it, but we can't all be sentimentalists. Some must be practical and realize that when a dog bites his master or a member of his family he is distinctly out of place. He is trying to be boss, and that just won't do. We can understand why a dog might bite a stranger—the reason can usually be found with a little investigation—but we refuse to excuse, or even try to ascertain why he bites a member of his family.

QUERIES

Q. How old is a Cocker Spaniel before he is full grown?

A. A Cocker is considered full grown when a year old.

Q. What causes warts on a dog and how can they be removed?

A. The cause of warts has never been definitely established. If on the skin they may be removed by applying castor oil to them several times daily. If in the mouth they should be removed surgically by a Vet.

Q. My dog has a rupture. Is there any cure for this?

A. Most ruptures can be corrected through surgery by any competent Vet. If you suspect a rupture, take your dog to a Vet immediately.

Q. My dog's ears itch him continually. He scratches them and rubs them on the floor. They do not seem to be sore.

A. Inspect his ears carefully, you will probably find that they are full of wax. If so, drop a little warm olive oil in them at night and then clean them out in the morning with absorbant cotton.

Q. My dog has halitosis bad. What can I do for it?

A. Foul breath usually comes from an unhealthy digestive tract, although it can be caused by an unclean mouth. Get some block magnesia at a drug store and feed him a piece as large as hickory nut daily for a week. Keep his bowels open and feed a good dry dog food, supplemented by fresh meat. Inspect his mouth and if necessary clean his teeth with a piece of cotton dipped in soda. If there is tartar (hard brown substance) on his teeth, chip it off with a blunt piece of metal.

Terry Expects Reds to Give Him Trouble and Picks Yanks

Giants Pilot Arrives At New York and Is Freely Quoted

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—Sweet William Terry, baseball's gift to the sports writers, blew into town with a stiff wind today and calmly picked his own Giants and Will McKechnie's Cincinnati Reds as the clubs most likely to succeed in this summer's National League war.

The mild man from Memphis went even further and saw the possibility of the St. Louis Cardinals climbing into the first division, in which case Pittsburgh' collapsible Pirates might be the outfit dropping out of the money.

He added that he's willing to make a deal for pitchers, and would like very much to get the temperamental Van Lingle Mungo from Brooklyn, which is like saying you'd like to get a bomb in your morning mail.

Then, giving just a passing glance (and shudder) in the direction of the American League, he also decided it was about time to stop trying to pick any club to beat the Yankees.

"I did it a couple of times," he recalled ruefully. "And the pick snapped right back in my face. So did the Yanks in the World Series. You might as well wise up right now that it's silly to name any club to beat that bunch.

"But I'd sure like to meet 'em again in the World Series next fall, if the team I have this year stays in one piece. This club has more power than any I've ever managed, with the addition of Zeke Bonura on first and Frank Demaree in the outfield."

"The Cubs, even though they're the pennant-holder, aren't as strong as they were. Cincinnati looks like the toughest and only the Reds' infield can stop them."

Merion Club Will Be Site Of Cup Play

Haverford, Pa., Club Is Awarded 1939 Challenge Round

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—The United States Lawn Tennis Association, at its annual meeting today, adopted the recommendation of its Davis Cup committee of management that the 1939 challenge round be awarded to the Merion Cricket Club at Haverford, Pa.

Walter Pate, chairman and captain of the United States Davis Cup Team, told the association its committee favored the Merion courts over those of the Germantown Cricket Club because the latter were in bad condition for the United States-Australia matches last year.

Pate was supported by Walter Merrill Hall, chairman of the Davis Cup and international play committee, and Louis J. Carruthers. Both Hall and Carruthers are former presidents of the U. S. L. T. A.

Percy Clark, president of the Germantown Club, pointed out the championship courts had been reconditioned, but the association took the stand it would be impossible for re-seeded courts to be in proper condition by challenge round time. Paul Gibbons, president of the Middle States Tennis Association, and Julian S. Merrick, former president of the national organization, also argued for Germantown but to no avail.

The only change in the slate of officers was the election of Gordon E. Small, of Cincinnati, to replace Ralph Westcott, of Chicago, as secretary. Holcombe Ward, of New York, was re-elected president; Joseph E. Wear, Philadelphia, first vice president; Lawrence A. Baker, Washington, D. C., second vice president, and Russell Kingman, Orange, N. J., treasurer.

The Germantown delegation, not content with the oral vote, called for a proxy vote and was beaten 45,650 to 7,225.

The challenge round will be played September 2-4 after the inter-zone finals have been decided, probably at the Longwood Club, Brookline, August 24-26. Preceding the inter-zone play, the national doubles also will be played at Longwood, August 14-19.

Dates for the national singles championships at Forest Hills were fixed at September 7-16.

Other tournament dates: Girls hard courts, April 28-May 7, Berkeley Calif.; national clay courts, June 18-25, Chicago; national intercollegiate, June 26-July 1, Merion Cricket Club; national interscholastic, starts July 3, Merion Cricket Club; national junior and boys, July 31-August 6, Culver, Ind.; national public parks, August 14-20 or August 21-26, New York; Wightman Cup, August 25-26, Forest Hills; girls grass courts, August 28-September 2, Philadelphia; junior and boys indoors, December 26-January 1, site not awarded.

Rough Riders Lose Thriller

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Front Royal, Va., Feb. 4.—In a high speed action game from the first whistle to a thrilling finish here this afternoon, Randolph-Macon Academy defeated Roosevelt High School, of Washington, D. C., 57 to 55. The Yellow Jackets got first blood with two baskets, but Roosevelt passed to lead, 17 to 16, in the first period. At half-time the score was Randolph-Macon, 26; Roosevelt, 24.

With Randolph-Macon guarding closely, the visitors tried unsuccessful long shots in the third quarter, which ended with the Yellow Jackets leading, 45 to 32.

In the final period, Roosevelt made a comeback with long shots by West, Travis and Zuras, but were short by two points at the final whistle. Frene, of the Yellow Jackets, was the outstanding player.

G-Men Facing Task In Week's Cage Bill

Making a valiant effort to qualify for the first half Heurich Amateur Basketball League play-off, Bureau of investigation dribblers face two important tasks in as many nights this week. Delaware & Huson already has qualified for the playoff.

Tomorrow the Sleuths engage the colorful Dapper Dan quintet at 9:30 o'clock in a game that will eliminate one or the other from first half consideration. Tuesday the G-Men oppose W. W. Chambers in the feature of another triple-header at the Heurich gym.

Supporting games tomorrow night include Delaware & Hudson vs. Little Tavern, and PWA vs. United Clay. The first game is scheduled for 7:30 o'clock.

Schwartz to Defend His Handball Crown

Jack Schwartz will be defending his District of Columbia handball singles titles for the fifth time in the annual four-wall championships, which will be held tomorrow through Friday at the Central Y. M. C. A.

Schwartz, paired with his old partner, Paul Perlman, also will defend the doubles title against a strong field. Their chief competition in the doubles should come from George Wendlandt and Gustave Goldstein, and the Engelhardt brothers, Walter and Charles. Goldstein, incidentally, lost the final singles match to Schwartz last year.

1,500 See Hoyas Lose City's First Ice Hockey Match

Baltimore's All-Stars 6-1 Winners

Georgetown Shows Much Promise in Initial Competition At Chevy Chase

Georgetown University's inaugural hockey game, and the first indoor game ever played in the city, was a complete success from the attendance standpoint last night. Nearly 1,500 spectators jammed the Chevy Chase Ice Palace for the Hoyas match with an All-Star aggregation from Baltimore, and almost 700 more were turned away for lack of room.

The novice Hoyas lost, 6-1, but indicated throughout that a little experience will improve the team. An unfortunate break in the first minute of play accounted for the All-Stars' first goal. Georgetown was unable to score until the last period.

Johnny Smith, Georgetown left defense, checked Walter Suter, of the visitors, and was penalized 2 minutes. While he warmed the bench, Suter came in fast to score. Mark Kelly also tallied for the winners in the opening period.

The Baltimoreans were limited to a single goal in the second period, while Georgetown made numerous attacks on the invaders' goal. Smith, who appeared to be the "goat" of the game, came through in the final period to erase the smear against him. He scored the only Georgetown point, while the All-Stars put the game out of reach with three well-placed shots by Lilly, Wikoff and Charley Paul.

S. Ambrose, member of the Baltimore Oriole hockey team, acted as one referee for the fast, exciting contest. To most of the spectators it was the first game of its kind ever witnessed and they accompanied the exciting action with continuous applause.

Visitations Here Today for Battle With Brewer Five

Featuring Red Conaty, who used to pass and shoot for George Marshall's Palace Laundry team in the "Arcade Days," will be in the line-up of the Brooklyn Visitations this afternoon when they tackle the Heurich Brewers at the Heurich gymnasium in a battle due to begin at 3 p. m. The Brewers defeated the Brooklyn club in the last meeting of the two teams and the Visitations will be out for revenge.

The Brewers will depend on Mickey Schonfeld, third leading scorer in the American League, for their punch today. Schonfeld has 203 points.

Two Heurich Amateur League games will be on the program. Little Tavern and the D. C. Firemen clash at 2 o'clock with the Hot Shoppe and United Clay Co., taking the floor directly after the pro league clash.

6.1 seconds in winning the 60-yard dash. The meet's biggest upset came in that event when Ben Johnson, Columbia flash who ruled the indoor sprint world last year, failed to qualify for the finals.

Second to Borican in the two-thirds race was Mel Trutt, Indiana University, and in third place was Howard Borck, Manhattan. Gene Venzke, of the N. Y. A. C., the favorite, had a bad leg and pulled up sixth and last.

Other upsets were recorded in the 2-mile run, where Gregory Rice, of Notre Dame, beat favored Don Lash and in the half-mile run, where Francis Slater whipped Pittsburgh's lanky Negro Olympic champion, Johnny Woodruff. Woodruff suffered a sprained tendon in his leg and forced his team to later withdraw from a mile relay run.

Cunningham's time was his slowest on the Garden boards in recent years.

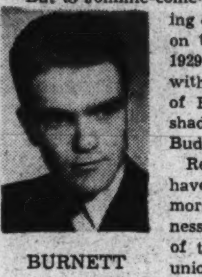
This Morning

—Without Shirley Povich

By Bill Burnett.

As long as men enjoy their memories, which will probably be as long as they enjoy anything, we will have the "old days" boys with us. It's a peculiarity of the breed. It's as natural as three and four.



BURNETT

But to Johnnie-come-latelys, like your correspondent, constant harping on the days that used to be in sports gets a trifle on the irksome side. To one who remembers the 1929 crash only because Dad was especially handy with the hairbrush at the time, the undying feats of Big Bill Tilden, Jack Johnson, etc., are overshadowed by the more recent performances of Don Budge and Joe Louis.

Recent changes made in high school rulings here have given local "days of yore" boys their juiciest morsel in years. Graduates of old Central and Business Highs, instead of gloating over the fine showing of their alma maters this season, spend their reunions now in damp-eyed recapitulation of the teams that could "whip these upstarts seven times a week"—back in 1926.

We won't try to convince anyone that basketball and football players put out now are as rugged or as talented as those of some years ago. As a matter of fact, we join the alumni in their ruggedness argument. Being limited to 19 years of age, there can be little doubt as to whether these boys are as tough as 21 and 22 year old schoolboy athletes of years ago.

But that the 1938-1939 vintage of schoolboy athlete stacks up with the bewhiskered "youth" of another era in talent seems hardly debatable. If he doesn't, what then? The whole purpose of high school athletics seems to be to develop young bodies, and in the process work up enough interest among outsiders to pay for the development.

The high schools are doing just that. After last year, when the new rules had hardly had time to prove themselves one way or the other, money has fairly flowed into schoolboy athletic funds. The 1938 football season was the most prosperous since the aforementioned 1929 crash, showing enough profit to carry all other athletics on the program.

Now basketball comes along with a promise to furnish any funds that football may have overlooked. The 12 games played so far in the interhigh cage race have drawn nearly 30,000 spectators, some sort of a record considering that many of last year's games were witnessed by less than 500 persons.

A disgruntled spectator tells you that a lot of people see the games, all right, but they don't have the color and fight of the Arcade days. "Why, one time," he continues, " a game at Arcade was so thrilling that spectators joined in a general battle royal doing no less than $1,000 worth of damage."

So far, we are forced to admit, fans have indeed been lax in the right spirit this year. They attend the games, but they don't get excited enough to tear things to pieces. Maybe it's the new sophistication they're going in for around the hgh schools.

From the competitive angle, however, schoolboy games have lacked nothing. Overlooking football, in which most games were won by a single touchdown last season, the basketball situation is as true a measure as any. In 12 games, two have been won by 2 points, and none has been won by more than 13 points. If that isn't conclusive proof that teams are about equal as the result of the age-limit rule, then we pass.

A time-honored athletic policy of high schools that is gradually giving way to more modern ways of thinking is the relation of the school sports to newspapers. A few years ago, we are told, it was as easy to get a story from a principal as to cross the Andes barefooted, with the possible exception of Charles Start at Eastern.

With the advent of Birch Bayh, head of the department of health and physical education here, that policy was put into cold storage along with hoop skirts and checkered vests. Mr. Bayh not only presides over the sports situation, but is the outlet for all information concerning athletics. He realizes the value of publicity to the sports curriculum, and looks kindly on it.

Some vestiges of the old regime still linger, however. Prospective changes in coaching staffs are considered no fit subject for newspaper stories, but that idea will also be discarded some day.

Lincoln Five Downs Miner

The Lion quintet of Lincoln University defeated Miner Teachers College five yesterday on the Cardozo court in a nip-and-tuck thriller, 36-34.

The Pennsylvanians drew away in the first half, principally because of the effectiveness of "Big Boy" Honey, fast-whirling center, and led at the whistle, 19-11.

Mack, who had caged four baskets in the first half, came back in the second with a rush, snaking in two overhand southpaw shots at the outset, followed by Gibson's looper, and Boyd's toss from under the basket to tie the count at 19-all.

Successive shots by Young, Honey and Gloster put the Lions again in front, 27-19, but Boyd and "Buck" Covington came to life, and with sensational baskets from midcourt set the stage for Mack's overhand toss that gave Miner the lead, 29-28.

Blues Beaten By Shepherd

Falling far behind in the final few minutes of play after holding its own in the first half, Gallaudet College dropped its seventh straight basketball game last night, losing to Shepherd Teachers College, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., 54-35, on the home floor.

The Blues, sparked by Ludivico, who scored 15 points, fought point for point with the favored visitors until late in the second half when the teachers forged gradually but steadily into a prohibitive lead.

Center Ambrose was the game's high scorer, tossing in five field goals and four fouls for Shepherd.

A.A.U. Tourney May Be Held In One Gym

Basketball Committee Hopes to Centralize Post TrophyCompetition

The District A. A. U. basketball championship tournament, sponsored by The Washington Post, will be conducted at one gymnasium this year if the present plans of the basketball committee work out. In recent years it has been necessary to play the games at a number of widely separated gyms and on a stagger schedule.

Winfree Johnson, committee chairman, is working with the centralizing of the tournament as his objective. The most successful events for The Post trophies have been those with the whole show under one tent. While Johnson is unable to announce the scene of action at this time, he believes that the one-gym plan can be carried out.

The tournament this year will be conducted on a big league basis with the best of officials and equipment. Several innovations are planned and interest in this year's titular play is at a high pitch.

There is a possibility that a few minor changes may be made in the lighter boys classes. These revisions in the weights, however, will be made only if they are in the best interests of the majority of the small teams.

As usual, two classes for girls' teams will be conducted. The girls will compete in the junior and senior divisions.

Al Bergner After Fourth Navy Letter

ALLEN BERGNER

Middie Grid Captain May Earn Unusual Honor as Wrestler

Annapolis, Feb. 4—Al Bergner, captain of the football team for next season, is the only three-letter man now in the Naval Academy and now seems well on his way to become one of the few midshipmen in the records of the Academy to hold four "Ns" for as many different sports.

At the end of last year, Bergner, in his first period of varsity athletics, was the holder of letters in football, boxing and lacrosse. This year, he won another letter in football and this winter shifted from the boxing ring to the wrestling mat. He won his first bout last Saturday and appears to be on his way to a letter in his fourth sport.

By official tests, Bergner, whose home is Kankakee, Ill., is the strongest midshipman who has entered the Naval Academy, and he is one of its most versatile athletes. In addition to his four sports, he has played on baseball and basketball teams and tossed weights for field and track teams. He also plays the piano and writes verses as gentler activities.

Navy Boxers 7-1 Winners

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Feb. 4.—In contrast to the caliber of teams that have represented the up-State institution at Annapolis in former years, Western Maryland College, of Westminster, made a lamentably poor showing in its annual boxing match with the Naval Academy mitt slingers here tonight, losing by a score of 7 to 1. Over 4,000 fans watched the bouts.

120 pounds—Tommy Bennett (Navy) defeated Joseph Rouse by decision.
127 pounds—John Shepperd (Navy) defeated Donald Beck by technical knockout after 1:49 of first round.
135 pounds—Wilbur Coyne (Navy) defeated Roland Stonesifer by technical knockout after 1:53 of first round.

Eagles' Center Scores 12 Points as Randolph-Macon Five Bows

Led by Carl Byham, a long center from Kane, Pa., American University gained its fourth victory in eight starts in the Chesapeake Conference last night by downing Randolph-Macon by 43-29. The Eagles added the Yellow Jackets to their list of victims, which includes Western Maryland and Bucknell. Byham put in five field goals and two fouls for 12 points and held his rival centers to one basket. Shulze and Brown made eight points each for the Eagles.

American U. ran up a 12-9 lead on the visitors in the earlier stages and then boosted the total to 20-9 before the Jackets could make another point. The Eagles drew away consistently in the final half.

Saxton and Battiste did the bulk of the scoring for the visitors.

Virginia U. Five Upsets Navy, 39-36

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Feb. 4.—A crazy bunch of Virginia Cavalry ran over Navy in the last half of their basketball game today to take a 39-36 victory.

Armand (Babe) Feldman, Cavalier forward, scored 22 points to sink the Navy.

The Virginians came from behind to knot the score at 28-all, largely on impossible one-handers by Feldman, fed by McCann and Strippler.

Navy was completely outclassed in the last half, their defense breaking down before the inspired play of the Virginians.

Feldman, a Morristown, N. J., boy, was the solo star. Laney, for Navy, was the only one of the Middie shotmakers to get going, sinking 5 field goals and two gifts for 12 points. Bob (The Jeep) Gillette and Ghesquiere, center, were held on 1 and 6 points, respectively.

Navy held a half-time lead of 19-13. Spotty play by both teams was evident.

Virginia was behind, 10-0, after eight minutes of play, when Feldman, stocky Cavalier forward, engineered an 8-point rally.

Navy's floor game broke down under its own basket near the end of the period, Harmen, center, and McCann, guard, repeatedly stealing Navy passes.

Feldman, with 8, and Shaffer, Navy guard, topped their teams in the first half.

V.P.I. Ring Team Defeats Carolina

Blacksburg, Va., Feb. 4 (AP).—With all bouts but heavyweight completed, Virginia Tech's boxers led the University of North Carolina ringmen tonight 5 to 2.

Billy Austin, of Virginia Tech, defeated Billy Winstead by decision in the first event for 120-pounders. Austin landed hard rights in all three rounds to hand the North Carolina star his first defeat.

Jim Woolwine, Tech's 155-pounder, knocked out Claude Sapp in a flurry of first-round blows, winning in 47 seconds.

Dave Pitts, Tech's entry in the 175-pound class, knocked out Bob Harmson in 1:09 of the second round.

Joe Obrechta, 135, and Frank Oliver, 165, scored decisions for Virginia Tech.

Citadel Boxers

Knoxville, Tenn., Feb. 4 (AP).—The University of Tennessee and the Citadel boxers fought to a 4-to-4 deadlock tonight, each team winning its points on decisions.

Down In Front

VIDMER.

New York, Feb. 4.—Next Friday afternoon a gay gang known as the Artists and Writers Golf Association will climb, or be assisted aboard a special train bound for Palm Beach, headed for their annual winter tournament. But I won't be among them. And strangely enough the thought doesn't fill me with any great distress.

Of course there will be a lot of free and fancy bridge with fellows like John Lagatta, Sid Hydeman, Frank Crowinshield, Dick Simon and Carl Mueller gathered about the table. I'll miss that, but after all this is a golf excursion and I won't really mind a bit not being there when they tee off.

As usual Gene Buck will be along, telling tales of the theater and its people, and there will be a lot of laughs when Billy Debeck and Fontaine Fox and the rest join the bunch on their arrival, but then they will start playing golf and so it really doesn't matter if I'm not there.

You see, during these weeks of rain and ice and snow, I've had a chance to think over this business called golf, and I've just about reached the conclusion it's a lot of nonsense. You play a bad round and you're disconsolate the rest of the day. You play a good round and you're elated. But why the distress and why the joy? After all you haven't accomplished anything. And just because you were good today isn't any assurance of your future form. You may be just as terrible as ever tomorrow. Besides a good round, now and then, only adds to your dissatisfaction when the bad ones come along.

And there's no point of satisfaction, no matter how well you've scored. A golfer who plays around 110 gets down to 105. But he isn't satisfied. Instead he lies awake at night and fervently wishes he could break a hundred. Ah, that would be all right, he thinks. Just to break a hundred, consistently, of course, and he would never be ashamed of his game.

And so the time comes when he does break a hundred. He does it once and is heart-broken forever thereafter if he fails to do so. But suppose he gets down in the nineties regularly. He still doesn't get any satisfaction out of the game. He starts thinking about the next stage—the eighties. Ah, that would be something if he could always count on a score somewhere in the eighties. Not the low eighties, of course, but 88 or 87. Then he could play with anybody without apologizing for his performance.

But the golfers who are scoring in the high eighties consistently are just as much perturbed about their games. They want to get in the low eighties. That's where the real golfers play. At least, that's where the real country club golfers play, and who wants to be anything more than a country club golfer? A good country club golfer is the one who really has nothing to worry about. He has no reputation to protect, he plays with anybody around and when he turns in his 81 to 82 at the end of the round, the rest of the foursome shake their heads in awe and say, "Gee! you really play this game."

Royal Pam Surprise Winner in $5,000 Handicap at Hialeah

$33.30 Shot Takes Lead In Stretch

Greentree Filly in First Stake Victory Inscoelda Disappoints Arcaro Rides Winner

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., Feb. 4.—A brown filly named Royal Pam, so-so in nine previous starts and running in her first stake event, outclassed a brilliant field of Kentucky Derby and Flamingo Stakes eligibles today to win the $5,000 Bahamas Handicap at Hialeah Park.

It was an upset that amazed the crowd of 12,000, who had installed Herbert M. Woolf's entry of Inscoelda and Technician the 2-to-1 favorite. The pay-off was $33.30 on a $2 straight mutuel ticket.

Technician easily won the place, three lengths ahead of Mrs. W. Plunket Stewart's Early Morn, but Inscoelda, champion juvenile filly last year, started next to last and finished seventh in the field of 12 3-year-olds. Don Meade, the comeback jockey, rode Early Morn, which was a close second choice in the betting.

Royal Pam sprinted the 7 furlongs in the good time of 1:23 4-5 to earn $4,790 for her owner, former United States Senator Johnson N. Camden, of Kentucky. Jockey Ira Hanford rated the daughter of Royal Minstrel in third place to the home turn and drove to the front near the eighth pole.

Technician Held Safe

Technician, fourth on the rail to the stretch, could not come closer than a length and a half to Royal Pam. The filly carried only 113 pounds to the top-weighted Inscoelda's 121.

The third race, another 7-furlong event for 3-year-olds, also developed a new threat for the $20,000 Flamingo Stakes to be run here February 25, when Mrs. Payne Whitney's Roll and Toss romped to an easy victory three lengths ahead of Agress. Stockboard showed a head back.

Jockey Eddie Arcaro took the Greentree gelding, a son of Questionnaire, to an early lead, and won under wraps. Roll and Toss had been out of condition for several weeks.

Meade Rides Winner

Don Meade had to wait until the sixth race, a test of a mile and a quarter, before entering the winner's circle. It took all that Don could do to get Chance Star, a $5.10 for $2 favorite, first home by a nose over The Runner. Veiled Lady was beaten three lengths while finishing third.

Meade, who had his choice of the two mounts—Chance Star and The Runner—selected the first named. He probably could have won on either horse, as it turned out, for his riding settled the slight difference of supremacy between the two-platers in their long hard duel.

Muncie Man Breaks Outboard Motor Mark

Lakeland, Fla., Feb. 4 (AP).—Paul Wearly, of Muncie, Ind., set a new world record for Class A outboard motorboats of 44.117 miles an hour here today in the first heat of the annual midwinter regatta.

The previous mark of 43.774 miles an hour was established by Robert Flagg, at Boston, Mass., August 1, 1936.

Warlaine Wins $1,000 Handicap At Gulfstream

Hollywood, Fla., Feb. 4 (AP).—Warlaine, a 4-year-old son of Man o' War, carrying the silks of Weston W. Adams, of Boston, won as an odds-on favorite should in the $1,000 Broward Handicap at Gulfstream Park today.

Warlaine, with Eddie Robart up, galloped to a two-length victory over Mrs. P. A. Hollushickie in the track-record time of 1:45 4-5 for a mile and a sixteenth. C. N. Mooney's Teddy Haslam finished a nose back in third place.

The winner paid $3.70 for $2.

Polly Hastings Wins $1,500 Ponchartrain

New Orleans, Feb. 4 (AP).—Polly Hastings and Waxwing, entry of R. A. Coward, and their jockeys, Harry Krovitz and J. H. Bowen, displayed perfect racing teamwork today to finish first and second in the $1,500 Ponchartrain Handicap at the Fair Grounds.

Waxwing set the pace for more than three-quarters of the mile and 70 yards route, then gave way to his stablemate. Polly Hastings, a 5-year-old mare by Peter Hastings, took command at the head of the stretch and went on to win by a length.

Santa Anita's $10,000 Race To Flying Lee

Los Angeles, Feb. 4 (AP).—Flying through the mud to overhaul the betting favorite, Hal Price Headley's Flying Lee nosed out Sweet Nancy today and won the $10,000 Santa Margarita Handicap at Santa Anita Park.

With 35,000 turf fans gathered under clear skies for the day's biggest race, Headley's 4-year-old filly and 17-to-1 shot, overtook Norman Church's Sweet Nancy in the closing strides of the mile and a sixteenth event and held on long enough to capture the verdict in a photo finish. The time was 1 minute 47.1 seconds.

Jockey Sammy Renick give Flying Lee the whip in the stretch after keeping her close to the pace, and Sweet Nancy's two-length lead dwindled. Mrs. Emil Denemark's Genie Palatine ran third.

Twelve entries went to the post, Marica, the prerace favorite; Real Clear and Pattycake having been scratched.

Sweet Nancy, winner of the recent Santa Susana Stakes for fillies, had little trouble going to the front at the three-quarter pole, and seemed headed for victory until Jockey Longden seemingly relaxed and Flying Lee came up with a rush.

Winner in only one out of four starts at Santa Anita this winter, Flying Lee, victorious in the Kentucky Oaks last fall, was virtually overlooked by the betting fraternity and paid $37.40, $12.80 and $7.40 across the board. Sweet Nancy paid 4.20 and $3.80 to place and Genie Palatine $8.20.

Trailing behind the three were Parscout, Decuria, Carvola, Wild Turkey, Primulus, Sumatra III, First Kiss, Two Bob and Fair Knightess.

Londos Heads Rassle Card On Thursday

"Champion" to Meet Tommy O'Toole In Feature Bout

With world's champion Jim Londos heading the cast, a "bargain night" will be celebrated Thursday at Turner's Arena where the Greek meets popular Tommy O'Toole and the cordially disliked Golden Terror matches skill with ponderous Chief Sanooke.

While the Londos-O'Toole contest overshadows the others from a standpoint of science and skillful tactics, the Terror-Sanooke duel will provide the chief interest of those who delight in seeing the masked villain tossed around. Most of the patrons have abandoned hope of ever seeing the Terror unmasked in public, but will make one last trip to the Arena just in case Sanooke proves to be the man for the task. The beefy Indian at least will match the Terror in size, depriving him of an advantage he enjoyed in previous bouts.

Londos and O'Toole, however, will have a generous following, for their last match several weeks ago split the audience in two widely divided schools of thought. There are those who contend Shamus would have pinned the Greek had he not been rendered null and void by an ill-fated dive through the ropes; and opposed to them are those who adhere to the opinion that Londos eventually would have out-smarted the Irishman.

On paper it shapes up as one of the best matches Promoter Joe Turner has made this winter, and it will not be surprising if the result is recorded among the season's upsets.

Jimmy Jones Tangles With Tony Cisco

Fight at Arena Reminiscent of Hunt Club Blood Orgies

The knock-down, drag-out style of fighting in vogue a few years ago at the old Riding and Hunt Club comes into its own again tomorrow night against the slightly different background of Turner's Arena, where Jimmy Jones and Tony Cisco (nee Giaccio) tangle in an eight-round engagement.

The Gallop and Search Club housed duels famous for their fierceness and bloodshed, and the appreciative customers literally fought for tickets. A man could be down in those not-so-distant days but not out until they bore him away on a stretcher. A fighter emerging from combat without so much as a pinked nose was not considered smart or clever, but disgraced. The boys understood they were paid to supply action and fulfilled their part of the bargain in admirable fashion.

Name fighters were notoriously scarce, although it was in the old hoss barn that fans first came to know Phil Furr, Bob Wilson and others of their ilk. Good fighters, all, but not champions, nor even outstanding contenders—just fighters. Moreover, they were free of conniving managers who refused to send them in the ring against any but crippled or handcuffed opponents. The fight game in that lush era was literally a fight game.

Tomorrow night the boys may be a little short of science, but the action virtually is guaranteed. There may be an occasional thumb stuck in somebody's eye, they may "heel" a bit, or "accidentally" toss a low punch, but you can rest assured there will be no stalling. Both are brawlers of the first degree—no holds barred, intent on winning at any cost.

Pete Galiano, who wants a return bout with Lou Gevinson, stacks up against Johnny Dube in another eight-rounder, and Buddy Thomas and Vince DePola are rematched, for the sixth time, in a third bout at the same distance.

Galiano, a little fellow with a big punch in his right hand, came within an ace of stopping Gevinson in their first engagement last December, getting up off the floor to carry the fight to the District southpaw. He proved his ability to take a punch as well as give one and has been dunning the matchmaker for another date with Lou. If he gets by Dube, who incidentally learned the fundamentals of boxing at the Jewish Community Center before transferring his headquarters to New York, Pete will get the desired shot at Gevinson.

Thomas and DePola struggled to a draw in their last bout—a six-rounder, that saw the former rally to pull up on even terms after being on the verge of a knockout in the first two sessions. This will be the seventh and "rubber" match—and positively the last between them.

A pair of four-rounders open the show, Ben Cohen engaging Soldier Steve Andrews, of Fort Meade, and Billy Banks, clever colored lad, opposing Battling Goose, of Baltimore.

Maryland U. Rifle Team Is Winner

University of Maryland riflemen played host to Western Maryland University yesterday at the Terp range, emerging with a 1394-1302 victory in a prone-kneeling-standing match.

Capt. Davis, of Maryland, turned in the best card of the match, a 284 accounted for by 98, 94 and 92 in the various positions. George Meeks was second with 282. The best marksman on the Terror squad was Hawkins with a 269.

Del Mar to Award $160,000 in Purses

Del Mar, Calif., Feb. 4 (AP).—Eyeing the summer horse racing prospects with optimism, General Manager William A. Quigley announced the purse and stake money distributions to be made at the 1939 meeting of the Del Mar Turf Club August 2 to September 4.

The club, headed by Bing Crosby, of Hollywood, will put up more than $160,000 in purses. Featuring the $5,000 Del Mar Handicap, the minimum purse level has been increased from $600 to $700, with 62 races carded at that figure to attract a better grade of horses. There will be 89 races at $800 and 23 worth $1,000.

Three races are scheduled for $1,500, four at $2,000, one at $2,500, two at $3,000.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAESCEND (entry), $3.00, $2.40, $2.20; BAY CARSE, $3.70, $2.20; BRACING, $2.20.

MAESCEND began alertly, was hustled clear of his opposition in the opening furlong and was never menaced the remainder of the trip to win in hand. BAY CARSE stumbled when the break came and was bumped by BRACING, but settled into his stride swiftly, went forwardly throughout and outlasted BRACING in the final drive. BRACING moved up fast on the outside in the run out of the chute and finished gamely, but was unable to better his position through the stretch. ABBASSIDE was in tight quarters in the early stages and was pinched back at the furlong pole when BAY CARSE and BRACING bore in.

SECOND RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start poor from Bahr gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post 2:31. Off 2:32. Winner, P. L. DISTRACTIBLE, away forwardly, was eased off the pace until midway around the turn, moved up with determination when placed to pressure, shook off BILLY'S FOLLY through the stretch and was going away at the end. BILLY'S FOLLY displayed the most speed and opened up a good lead entering the stretch, but faltered in the stretch run. GOLD KNIGHTESS outbroke the field, went prominently throughout, closed gamely to punishment and outlasted WOWO. The latter saved ground into the stretch and finished gamely to punishment, but could not get up.

Daily Double, Maescend and Distractible, Paid $9.60.

THIRD RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,000; allowances. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:01. Off 3:0[illegible]

Blakeney Sets Record in Winning Campbell Sweepstakes

Parsons 2d; Victor Rolls 2,044 Total

Tony Santini Third, Ray Parks Fourth; Joe Freschi's 192 Game Also Record

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Ed Blakeney, member of the Cuff and Santini team in the District League and tenth ranking bowler in the U. S. last year, cracked a 13-year Howard Campbell Sweepstakes record last night at Convention Hall as he won the 15-game event with a 2,044 total, and pocketed the first prize of $200.

The bespectacled, continual cigar-smoking Blakeney, runner-up in the event in 1933 when he lost by a single pin to Tony Santini, took the lead as early as the sixth game, lost it only twice through the final box and finished with a 74-pin margin over Howard "Ghost" Parsons. It was evident as early as the twelfth game when he took a 71-pin advantage that Blakeney was "in" with pins to spare.

Two Records Made

The record breaking total score of the winner was one of two tournament records established for the day as in the second block at Lucky Strike Joe Freschi blasted 5 strikes and 5 spares for a 192 game, 7 pins better than Fred Moore's 185 in the first running of the event at the old King Pin Alleys in 1927.

The new champion performed the unusual feat of duplicating his initial set at Brooklyn, 677, in the second block at Lucky Strike. After starting with 120 and 134 in the first two games, he took third place with a 147 in the third game and was in the runner-up spot at the one-third mark with fourth and fifth games of 136 and 140.

He failed to hit a sensational pace from the sixth through the eighth games, but drew a majority of the gallery in the eighth with a 176 effort, and was second only to Lou Jenkins as he finished with 109. He lost little time in clinching first prize in the final block with consecutive games of 149, 151, 134, 135, 121 for a 690 total.

Parsons Breaks Jinx

Parsons, one of the top ranking and major prize winning pinmen in the city for the past several years, broke a long-standing jinx in the Campbell event by finishing second with a 1,968 total, for $100. "Ghost" was third at the end of the first block with 651, remained in that position with 688 in the second set, and faltered with 629 at the Hall, but it was good for second by a 21-stick margin.

He bowled the most consistent pins of the entire field, with the exception of two lapses, in the first and last games.

Tony Santini, a previous winner, and not among the leaders until the thirteenth game, finished with 150 and 160 for a 1,949 total and third prize of $75. Fourth place went to the second block sensation, Ray Parks, Bethesda, with 1,947. Parks rolled consecutive games of 157-161 and 169 for 487. Santini had sets of 619—632—698 while Parks was 626—703—618.

Lou Jenkins, second block pace-setter after a sensational 744 set, hit a bad streak in the midst of his final effort, rolling 106 and 99 in succession, and finished out of the money. Bill Krauss finished fifth, with 1,942; Jenkins next, 1,933 and Joe Freschi seventh, 1,877.

Set and game prizes of $25 each went to: First block, John Anderson, 154, and Bill Krauss, 683; second, Joe Freschi, 192 and Jenkins, 744, and third, Hokie Smith, 162 and George Demerss, out of the three out-of-town bowlers entered, 646.

Charlotte Hall Wins Another, 21-17

Charlotte Hall basketers won the tenth game in 13 starts this season yesterday in a B Conference League game with Boys Latin School, of Baltimore, 21 to 17.

Slaughter and Monedero paced the winner's scoring with 9 points apiece. Only once during the contest were the Latin lads in the lead, and that in the third period. Charlotte pulled away to hold a close margin in the final minutes. Charlotte led, 11 to 9, at the half.

Central Is Beaten By York Five, 37-21

York, Pa., Feb. 4.—The invading Central High basketball team, of Washington, dropped a game to York Collegiate Institute last night on the local court, 37-21. It was the second game of the visitors' road trip, Central having beaten Cambridge (Md.) High last night.

By half-time, York had amassed an 18-11 advantage that Central tried vainly to overcome. Scoring honors went to Tuleya, of the winners, with 11 points, but his teammate, Culbertons, and Len Sokol, of Central, each tallied eight points.

'Rip' Moyer Breaks B.Y.P.U. Pin Record

"Rip" Moyer's 406 went into the books as a new season's record in the Baptist Young People's Union last night at Arcadia, while W. Kautz, of Petworth, had a 165 game, high for the night and second of the season, with only five marks.

Fifth Baptist also joined the season record holders with a 1,758 set and had high game of 591.

Katherine Vick Wins Women's Pin Tourney

Norfolk Girl Takes $100 Prize in U. S. Sweepstakes

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Feb. 4.—Katherine Vick, Norfolk's expert pinwoman, won the $100 first prize in the eighth annual United States Women's Sweepstakes here tonight at the New Franklin Bowling Center with a record 1,273 total for the ten-game event.

The new champion had an ample lead at the end of the first block at the Spillway Alleys, with a 643 total, and finished with 630, including a final game of 161, highest of the tournament, and a score that guaranteed the first prize and new record.

Helen Randlett, holder of the previous mark, 1,211 in 1936, was second, the Richmond entrant totaling 1,204 for the $50 second prize. Alice Lucas, of the host city, was third, 1,189 for $25.

Lorraine Gulli, Washington, and her arch rival, defending champion Ida Simmons, of Norfolk, defending champion and top-ranking woman bowler in the country, finished fourth and fifth, respectively, with only five pins separating. Miss Gulli had 1,186 for $15 and Miss Simmons 1,181 for $10.

Edna Brockwell, Richmond, had 1,172 for $6.50, a score that tied Georgia Hays, Silver Spring, for the last money.

J. Spates, Baltimore and H. Lumpkin, Thomastown, Conn., had 149 games to divide high game prize in the first block of $6.50. A Heltzel, Baltimore, had 593. Second block prizes of $6.50 each went to I. Cadaret, Norfolk, 150 game and Caroline Hiser, Silver Spring, 598 set.

HELP TO RAISE MONEY FOR A PERMANENT BLOOD AND SERUM BANK AT CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL

Have a heart and take a hand in this city-wide movement to establish a permanent blood and serum bank at Children's Hospital. This will make it possible for youngsters to get immediate blood transfusions when they need them.

In order to accommodate the thousands who are planning to participate in America's Card Party, it was decided that every group hold a party in its own home, church or club house. Each person who plays buys a ticket in the form of a large red heart for $1.

Tickets on sale at The Washington Post.

No expenses are deducted for overhead. Every cent goes to establish a blood and serum bank at Children's Hospital.

Many committees are already formed. Many new ones are being formed. If you wish tickets or more information, come to room 305, Washington Post Building or call NAtional 4200, extension 329.

D.C. Credit Men Plan Annual Dinner Dance

Event Is Scheduled For Tuesday Night at The Wardman Park

More than 250 members and guests are expected to be present at the annual dinner and dance of the Washington Association of Credit Men to be held Tuesday night at the Wardman Park Hotel. John A. Reilly, president of the Second National Bank and a past secretary-manager of the association, will be master of ceremonies.

George B. Hoey, of Lyon, Conklin Co., general chairman of the committee on arrangements, is assisted by Mrs. Ethel J. Hess, of E. B. Adams Co., chairman of the program committee. Also to be present are the newly elected officers for this year: Humphrey Lloyd, president, of Washington Properties, Inc., and William R. Little, vice president, of the Evening Star.

C. L. U. President to Speak

Joseph H. Reese, national president of the Chartered Life Underwriters, has accepted the invitation of the D. C. Chapter of Chartered Life Underwriters to attend their annual banquet to be held at the Carlton Hotel on March 9, according to Hicks Baldwin, dinner chairman.

Mr. Reese, co-manager of the Penn Mutual Home Office Agency, has specialized in business insurance, estate analysis and taxation. Mr. Reese holds the Chartered Life Underwriter designation and the Agency Management Certificate conferred by the American College of Life Underwriters. He was one of the organizers of the Philadelphia Chapter of Chartered Life Underwriters and served two terms as its president, and was previously a director of the Philadelphia Association of Life Underwriters. Also, he was the first chairman of the joint educational committee on life insurance trusts of the Philadelphia Life Underwriters Association and the Philadelphia Fiduciaries Association, and contributed much to the co-operative educational program of both the underwriters and the trust representatives of Philadelphia.

Trust Fund Committee

At a meeting of the directors of the D. C. Bar Association held at the request of Theodore Cogswell, register of wills and clerk of the Probate Court, the following were appointed a committee on legal investments for trust funds: Walter C. Clephane, chairman, and George E. Hamilton, jr., Frank F. Nesbit, G. Bowdoin Craighill, William H. Donovan, Roger Whiteford, Louis M. Denit, George P. Hoover, Winship Wheatley, John E. Laskey and Leo A. Rover.

Two Birthdays

Today is the birthday of two building and loan association presidents, Eckert J. Sacks of the Washington Permanent and John B. Harrell of the Columbia Building. Born in Cassel, Germany in 1848, Mr. Sacks has been a resident of Washington for over 75 years. He helped organize the $10,000,000 Washington Permanent in 1881 and has been active in its affairs since then. His 91st birthday finds him in excellent shape.

John B. Harrell, born in Suffolk, Virginia, will celebrate his 73rd birthday. In 1907 he founded the Columbia Building Association and has seen it grow to a $5,000,000 institution. At the 31st annual meeting last fall he was re-elected president for the 32nd time.

Bethesda Loan Election

Lewis Eisele was elected president of the Bethesda Industrial Savings & Loan Co. at the annual meeting of stockholders and directors just held, it was announced yesterday by officials of the Southeastern Industrial Bankers, Inc., of which the Bethesda organization is an affiliate. Other officers elected at the annual meeting included M. W. Bohrer, vice president; William K. Brecht, executive vice president and manager; Clifton M. Eisele, secretary-treasurer.

The annual report of the stockholders revealed the company's earnings increased materially over the preceding year. Dividends for the year amounted to 7 per cent on preferred and 8 per cent on common stock. The Bethesda Industrial Savings & Loan Co. is one of 13 low-rate industrial loan companies affiliated with Southeastern Industrial Bankers, Inc. Others are located in the District of Columbia and throughout Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

Advertising Club Dinner

W. W. Wachtel, president of Calvert Distillers Corporation, will discuss "Fair Trade or Bankruptcy," before members and guests of the Advertising Club of Washington on Wednesday at the Willard Hotel.

Failure Anonunced On Cotton Exchange

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The New York Cotton Exchange announced today that Albert H. Watson, an independent broker on the floor of the exchange, had posted notice he was unable to meet his obligations.

The notice, the exchange said, automatically meant his suspension. Watson has been a member of the exchange since 1938.

N. Y. Exchange Reports for 1938 $1,548,417 Loss

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The New York Stock Exchange and its affiliated companies suffered a net loss for 1938 of $1,548,417, exclusive of $332,000 in initiation fees, its annual financial report disclosed today. This compared with a net loss in 1937 of $140,476.

This compared with a net loss in 1937 of $140,476.

The report states that adjustment of building valuation and reserves thereupon reduced the members' equity representing the interest in the exchange of all members by $546,394. Total income was less than that of 1937 by $1,829,000, the outstanding decreases being in stock clearing corporation charges of $622,000 and in listing fees of $955,000. This was accounted for by a falling off in business.

Expenses for the year were reduced $420,000 under the 1937 figure.

Associated Gas Output

New York, Feb. 4.—For the week ended January 27, Associated Gas & Electric System reports net electric output of 95,725,185 units. This is an increase of 10,676,193 units or 12.6 per cent above production of 85,048,992 units a year ago. This is the highest percentage increase for any week since July, 1937.

Local Trade Gains 14.71% During Week

2.24% Over Year Ago U. S. Average Steady Industry More Active

With the exception of one store in Washington, where a slight decrease was reported, all others turned in substantial increases in retail trade over the previous week, averaging 14.71 per cent, according to the weekly survey of the Department of Commerce. Compared with a year ago, an increase of 2.24 per cent was reported. The complete range was from minus 7 per cent to plus 10 per cent. Clearings were $20,051,129; year ago, $21,126,999. Visitors to Washington Monument, 3,428; previous week, 4,766; year ago, 7,740. Building permits, $1,621,400, including an $800,000 Doctors' Hospital and a $450,000 Juvenile Court Building; year ago, $88,300. January permits, $3,136,150; January, 1938, $903,650. Total passenger revenue, Capital Transit Co., past calendar week, $213,245; year ago, $204,000.

Industrial Rise

Only slight variation from recent general business levels was noted for the closing week in January, according to reports to the department from 36 key cities. Industrial activity was about one-fourth above the rate last year, steel ingot operations dropped moderately and contra-seasonally, automobile production and sales held at a better-than-seasonal rate, retail and wholesale trade generally continued its moderate advance, while building construction was again a bright spot in the business picture. Employment conditions were spotty.

Despite snow and rain in many sections, practically all reporting cities registered nominal increases in retail trade, or business on a par with last year, at which time, however, this branch of trade was extremely dull. Retail distribution in New York, however, was an exception to the general picture. Unfavorable weather and the break in the calendar adversely affected both department and specialty store sales, with no evidence of even moderately free spending of the luxury type. Department store trade was off 13.8 per cent from last year's comparative. Trade in Baltimore and Philadelphia also dipped below the like 1938 week, due to adverse weather.

Guardian Life Reports New High Records

The largest income for any year in its history and a new high mark in assets are reported by The Guardian Life Insurance Company of America in its 79th annual report to policyholders made public yesterday.

Total income of the company in 1938 amounted to $27,296,571, up $479,106 over 1937's record high figure. Admitted assets increased by $8,193,715 in 1938 to a new high mark of $132,964,301.

Total insurance in force with the company rose to $489,480,877, a net gain during the year of $7,923,36. An increase of $193,795, or 6.7% over 1937, in the company's insurance earnings last year was reported by President Carl Heye.

Hollywood Generals as Plentiful as Privates

The Census Bureau yesterday classified nearly every other person in the movie industry as a corporation officer.

It said that in 1937, for which figures have just been tabulated, the industry had 15,845 salaried officers drawing $104,324,328 and 18,779 "wage earners" earning $35,264,336.

Stock Market Ends Week At Higher Price Level

Good Gains Recorded in Final Session Profit-Taking Sets in Near Close Rail and Power Bonds Extend Advance

By Frederick Gardner,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Feb. 4.—Stock market leaders ended the week on an upward slant in today's brief session. Virtually all groups participated in the resumption of the recovery push, with gains running to 2 or more points at the best. A little profit-taking at the close reduced top marks in most cases.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was up .4 of a point at 50.4. On the week this composite showed a net gain of 2.3 points, its best performance since the week ended October 8. The comeback followed four consecutive weekly declines.

Volume picked up a bit on the forward swing, with transfers for the 2 hours totaling 486,160 shares against 582,530 a week ago. The week's turnover, however, was the smallest since the period ended September 10, amounting roughly to 4,000,000 shares compared with some 7,000,000 in the preceding week.

The Days Leaders

Among the day's favored issues were Bethlehem Steel, Chrysler, U. S. Rubber, Sears Roebuck, Safeway Stores, J. I. Case, Glenn Martin, Sperry, North American, Public Service of New Jersey, American Smelting, Westinghouse, du Pont, Eastman Kodak, U. S. Gypsum and Santa Fe.

A star performer in the curb was Lockheed up 1⅜. Fractional gains were shown by Electric Bond & Share, United Gas, Cities Service and Grumman. American Gas & Electric fell back a trifle. Volume of 92,000 shares compared with 93,000 a week ago.

Secondary bonds were given a life, but commodities were accorded indifferent support. Wheat at Chicago was unchanged to off ¼ of a cent a bushel and corn down ⅜ to ½. Cotton was 5 cents a bale lower to up 15 cents. Both sterling and the French franc were unchanged in terms of the dollar. American stocks adanced at Amsterdam, the only large overseas market open at the week-end.

The Washington furore over the Administration's international policies was hardly calculated to stimulate Wall Street sentiment, but the hope was expressed the latest flare-up might result in a beneficial clarification of the situation. The European scene apparently was a neutral factor, marketwise.

Steels and Motors

Steels were aided by forecasts mill operations next week would at least hold even with the current week. Motors found support on opinions voiced in this industry that the 1,000,000-unit output for the current quarter previously estimated was now assured. Rumors that "good news" for the utilities was near at hand helped the power company stocks. Aircrafts were propped by advices Great Britain would purchase 250 warplanes in America in addition to 400 already ordered.

The market gave its best performance on the week on Monday when Hitler's address before the German Reichstag, starting late in the session, sounded much more of a conciliatory note than had been expected. The advance was continued Tuesday when Prime Minister Chamberlain made a friendly reply to the Hitler address. There was a small set-back coincident with the cashing of profits Wednesday, but Thursday found the averages again climbing. The slight dip Friday was believed due principally to speculative indifference.

The week's business developments, on the whole, were more constructive than otherwise. The favorable reception of North American's $70,000,000 debenture offering aroused thoughts of a reopening of the new capital market. Electric power consumption jumped, carloadings increased and building construction mounted. Stormy weather hit automotive deliveries, but merchandising sales held up in the face of this handicap.

Bonds Continue Advance

Small buying orders were enough to keep the rise in the bond market going today under momentum of the recovery which continued most of the week. Some utility and rail issues—the center of the demand—extended previous gains a point or more as traders bought in groups which led the January decline.

The buying was attributed partly to hopes for resumption of industrial expansion as spring approaches. Expectations of improvement in relations between the Government and private power interests seemed to have an influence in the rise of power company loans.

International Hydro-Electric 6s ran up nearly 2 to 79, expanding the improvement they have registered since the parent company, International Paper & Power, announced a few days ago a plan for segregation of the paper and power properties.

A higher level of rail traffic compared with a year ago, together with hopes for rail-aid legislation in this session of Congress, favored the carrier liens. Up a point or more were Alleghany 5s of 1950, stamped, Great Northern 4s, Northern Pacific 4s of 1997 and Nickel Plate 4½s. American & Foreign Power 5s added another point to the previous gains, ending at 53½.

The week-end gains helped make it one of the best weeks the market has had in some time. Transactions were only $3,327,700, face value, against $5,526,000 a week ago. The Associated Press average price of 20 rails for the day advanced .3 to 59.2, making a rise of nearly a full point in the last three sessions. U. S. Treasury and most foreign loans were mixed in a narrow market. Belgium 6s were marked up a point.

Corn Declines To Low Price For This Year

Light Export Demand Buenos Aires Weak Wheat Prices Dip

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 4.—Corn futures fell as much as ⅝ cents today to the lowest levels since late last December. Weakness at Buenos Aires and lack of export demand contributed to the downturn.

Selling in the corn market here followed commission house offerings, but there was some absorption at 50 cents for May contracts. The Liverpool corn futures market, which reported some pressure from nearby Argentine parcels, closed ⅛ lower and Buenos Aires finished ⅛ to ⅛ down.

The wheat market, influenced by lower than expected Liverpool quotations, weakness in corn and forecasts for precipitation in the domestic Southwest, was slightly lower, closing unchanged to ¼ off compared with yesterday's finish: May, 68⅝@68½; July, 68⅝. Corn closed ¼ to ½ off; May, 49⅞@50; July, 51. Oats, unchanged to ⅛ off; May, 28⅜. Soybeans, ⅝ off; May, 79¾. Rye, unchange to ¼ off; May, 46⅛. Lard, unchanged to 5 cents lower.

May 8.17 Cents Cotton Higher;

New York, Feb. 4 (AP)—A late covering movement by trade interests today strengthened old crop cotton futures. Final prices were 1 point lower to 3 higher. Traders on the whole refused to take a definite market position until the 1939 Washington crop program develops into plans more tangible than present hopes and rumors.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures rallied half-heartedly today after a series of breaks earlier in the week. Moderate new buying and covering lifted final prices 2 to 3 points, as liquidation diminished. Sales totaled 72 lots. March closed 6.66@6.67; May, 6.80@6.82; July, 6.90; September, 6.95@6.96. Crude oil was reported 5⅛ cents bid in the Southeast and Valley. Moderate business was indicated in Texas at the unchanged price of 5¾ cents.

Industry Rate Continues Dip To Lower Level

Fourth Week's Decline Current Index Is 89.1 70.2 a Year Ago

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 4.—Industrial activity declined for the fourth consecutive time this year during the latest week, according to recent statistics.

The Associated Press seasonally adjusted index dipped to the lowest level since November, to 89.1 per cent of the 1929-30 average. This compared with 90.3 the previous week and 70.2 a year ago.

Although holding substantially above the low levels prevailing at the pit of the slump early in 1938, operations have receded from the high established early in December of 94.0.

Steel mill activity was the only major group measured by this index to show a sizable gain this week, although electric power output improved slightly against seasonal expectancies.

Automobile assemblies, on the other hand, were sharply lower. This was reported to reflect largely unusually severe weather conditions in major producing centers, however.

Residential building also dropped, for the second consecutive period. This marks the fiirst time since recovery got under way last spring that home construction has receded for two weeks running.

Freight carloadings held up well because of a heavy increase in coal movement. Miscellaneous loadings, the principal industrial classification, continued the downward trend of recent weeks.

Cotton manufacturing slumped for the fourth week, after allowance for seasonal factors, to the lowest point since October.

January Strikes Cost Workers Over 3 Millions

New York, Feb. 4.—Continuing the trend established in the last half of 1938, industrial relations in January, 1939, were relatively peaceful. Neverthless there were enough strikes and labor disputes in the month to cause workers involved a loss of working time valued at over $3,000,000, according to the magazine Supervision. This compares with $2,641,000 in January, 1938, and $13,708,000 in January, 1937.

The relatively peaceful conditions prevailing in the last half of 1938 are brought out in comparison with figures for wage losses recorded in the first half of 1937: For the last of 1938, $25,116,000; for the first half of 1937, $101,181,000.

Thtese figures are not to be confused wtih unemployment data. They cover time for which work was available at prevailing wages, but which employes preferred not to accept. They also take no account of losses suffered by employers through cancellation of orders, disruption of business, or other expenses of industrial strife.

U. S. Treasury Receipts

By the Associated Press.

The position of the Treasury February 2: Receipts, $33,232,345.07; expenditures, $35,145,846.05; net balance, $3,065,137,448.22, including $2,419,583,297.74 working balance; customs receipts for the month, $1,794,621.43. Receipts for the fiscal year (since July 1), $3,284,389,445.73; expenditures, $5,332,338,461.76, including $1,789,547,325.62 of emergency expenditures; excess of expenditures, $2,047,949,016.03; gross debt, $39,687,915,338.65, an increase of $2,994,724.47 over the previous day; gold assets, $14,694,032,408.91.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, Feb. 4 (AP) (U. S. Dept. of Agri.).—Fine territory wools received a fairly good demand in Boston during the past week. Most of the business was on original bag lines, and prices showed a strengthening tendency. Combing territory wools of half blood grades received a moderate demand while ⅜ and ¼-blood grades were slow at firm quotations. Bright combing fleece wools were mostly slow at steady quotations ranging 28 to 31 cents, in the grease, for fine Delaine, 29 to 31 cents for half bloods and 31 to 32 cents for ⅜ and ¼-blood grades.

World Wheat Crops Show Large Gains

U. S. 6% Higher Argentina 71% Canada's Double

By the Associated Press.

The Agriculture Department estimated the 1938-39 world wheat crop yesterday at 4,354,000,000 bushels. This compared with 3,686,000,000 bushels last year and 3,549,000,000 annually during the five years 1925-29. Included were all important producing countries except Russia and China, for which no estimates were available.

The department said a substantial increase over last year's production was reported from practically all important producing countries except Australia, Italy, Spain and the north Africa countries. The greatest percentage increase occurred in Canada, where the crop of 350,000,000 bushels was almost double that of the preceding year.

The United States crop of 931,000,000 bushels showed an increase of 6 per cent. Among important European producing countries the greatest increase occurred in France, where the crop of 345,000,000 bushels represented an increase of 34 per cent. The German crop, estimated at 215,000,000 bushels, was 20 per cent larger, while the Italian crop of 297,000,000 bushels was approximately the same as last year.

In Argentina, described as the most important surplus production country of the Southern Hemisphere, the crop was estimated at 316,000,000 bushels, an increase of 71 per cent.

Capital Transit Gets Loan Here Of $983,000

Participants Are 18 Local Banks and Acacia Mutual Life

To pay for 51 new buses and 38 new streamlined streetcars, the Capital Transit Co. is borrowing $983,000 from the following 18 local banks and the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co:

Riggs National Bank	$130,000
American Security & Trust Co.	130,000
Union Trust Co.	45,000
Washington Loan & Trust Co.	55,000
Hamilton National Bank	50,000
Second National Bank	25,000
National Savings & Trust Co.	50,250
Liberty National Bank	20,000
Munsey Trust Co.	25,000
Security Sav. & Com. Bank	12,000
National Metropolitan Bank	35,000
McLachlen Banking Corporation	15,000
Prince Georges Bank & Trust Co.	10,000
Anacostia Bank	5,000
Lincoln National Bank	15,000
National Capital Bank	15,000
National Bank of Washington	40,000
Acacia Mutual Life	50,000
Suburban National Bank, Silver Spring, Md.	10,000
Total	$737,250

In addition to the above sum, $245,750 will be in the form of a five-day loan from the Riggs National Bank, the financing being done in this way in order to keep full title to the security clear for the banks.

5 Years to Run

The remaining $737,250, or 75 per cent of the equipment cost, will be paid over a period of five years. The new loan, as the two previous loans was negotiated by Y. E. Booker & Co.

The loan is in the form of promissory notes, which are secured by pledge of the equipment under chattel trust agreement, the National Savings & Trust Co. acting as trustee. The first loan of this kind was made in 1937 and totaled $1,521,500. The second one was negotiated in 1938 for $1,120,000. The present $983,000 loan will bring the total amount to $3,624,500 which the Capital Transit Co. has borrowed here instead of financing purchases through equipment companies which would have obtained the money elsewhere.

Savings Units In 1938 Loan $797,996,000

27.87% of the Total Borrowed Went Into New Construction

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—The United States Building and Loan League today reported $797,996,000 was borrowed from savings, building and loan associations in 1938.

December loans were 6.3 per cent greater than during the same month of 1937. Loans which provided money to build new homes were 2 per cent higher in December than in the preceding month.

Morton Bodfish, executive vice president of the league, said $220,450,000, or 27.87 per cent of all loans went into new construction. He said loans for the purchase of homes accounted for the greatest part of the total borrowings, with those for building new homes second.

California was the leading State in construction loans during December, he said, while Ohio, New York and Illinois each reported more than $1,000,000 for this purpose. The California total was $2,746,000.

Ohio led in total loans for all purposes during December with $7,565,000, he said.

Liverpool, Feb. 4 (AP).—Expectations of liberal weekly world wheat shipments brought in local selling in futures today and values were off ¼ to ½ penny in final dealings. Far Eastern demand for wheat and flour was a stabilizing influence.

Trade support and local buying offset light liquidation and hedging in cotton futures. Prices moved narrowly and closed unchanged to 1 point higher.

Cultures Feared Origin of Outbreak

East Lansing, Mich., Feb. 4 (AP).—Michigan State College officials were trying tonight to locate the source of undulant fever germs which took the life of one student and caused the illness of 21 others and as many residents of East Lansing.

Dean Ward Giltner, of the college's veterinary science division, said the trail apparently led to a third-floor laboratory in the building which houses the world's largest collection of cultures of the undulant fever micrococcus.

The student who died was A. Arthur Goldberg, of Newark, N. J. The college hospital has been treating 21 other students for the ailment. President Robert T. Shaw said none of the remaining cases was severe.

France Reiterates Empire Indivisibility

Special Cable to The Post.

Paris, Feb. 4.—The indivisibility of the French empire was proclaimed once again Friday, this time in the form of an extraordinary resolution adopted unanimously in the chamber of deputies.

Auguste Brunet, deputy, and an honorary governor general of colonies, put this declaration before the chamber:

"The chamber solemnly declares that just as continental France, all parts of the empire are under the protection of their fatherland, together with the population sheltered by its flag; that the sovereignty of France is indivisible, and that it could not be transmitted, nor delegated, nor shared."

Lady Bradford Leslie's Party Attracts Hundred Guests

Distinguished Artists From New York Appear In Musicale Following Dinner; Foreign Envoys Among Those Present

OVER 100 guests attended the dinner and musicale which Lady Bradford Leslie gave last evening in her apartment at 2400 Sixteenth street. The artists, all of whom came from New York for the occasion, were Henriette Bagger Plum, Danish mezzo-soprano; Helen Schafmeister, pianist, and Mrs. George F. Baker, known professionally as Martha Atwood and formerly with the Metropolitan Opera.

The hostess wore a gown of ruby velvet trimmed with sable and a shawl of old rose point lace which had been in her family for several generations. The guests were seated informally at small tables.

THOSE PRESENT included the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring; the Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos; the Czecho-Slovak Envoy and Mme. Hurban; the Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Babes; Senator and Mrs. Henrik Shipstead, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark Bristol, Hector Bolitho, the distinguished English writer and lecturer; Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Frederick Coleman, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest G. Draper and Maj. Bernard Kennedy.

Also the Air Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. George C. Pirie, Ralph Totten, formerly United States Minister to South Africa; Robert Webster, Secretary of the South African Legation; Mrs. Effingham Towsend, Walter

First families of Virginia, Washington and Baltimore will flock to the Virginia Cotillion which will take place in Alexandria on Friday evening, February 10. In the spotlight will be two of this season's debutantes, Miss Jacqueline Meredith and Miss Margaret Byrd, who have been chosen to lead the cotillion figures. On the right Miss Meredith, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Payne Meredith of, Washington, poses in the costume she has selected for the affair. She is a descendant of Capt. William "Pepperpot" Payne of the Falmouth Blues, and Col. Samuel Meredith, another officer of Revolutionary days. In the picture below are Miss Josephine Robinson and Franklyn H. Respite Follows End Of White House Series

Smaller, More Informal Parties Expected After Whirlwind of Roosevelt Functions; 8,000 Entertained in Seven Weeks

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

WITH THIS SEASON'S White House calendar chalking off its last formal function the past week, Capital society now can look forward to a breathing spell. Oh, there will be plenty of partying right on until Lent, but in general get-togethers will be smaller and more informal with probably more diplomatic accent than has been in evidence since November.

Never in Washington history has a White House social schedule provided so many parties in such short time as this year. Beginning December 13 with the Cabinet dinner, the ten functions that long have been annual events followed each other at a lively clip and speeded into the home stretch Thursday evening with the biggest reception of all, the one honoring the Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

There will be entertaining at the Executive Mansion on through this month, of course. Mrs. Roosevelt will continue her afternoon musicales and luncheons, and she and the President probably will entertain at a number of small dinners from now until late spring; but the big seige of handshaking is over for both of them until the round of White House garden parties begins a few weeks from now.

IN THE PAST SEVEN weeks they have entertained around 8,000 guests, and that's not counting the hundreds who have been on hand for Mrs. Roosevelt's afternoon teas and musicales.

Smallest dinner on the official schedule was the one given for the Vice President and Mrs. John Nance Garner. Eighty-two guests were seated at the horseshoe table for that event, but several hundred came in late for the musicale that featured Latin-American music and folk songs of the type that generally appeal to the Vice President.

CHANCES ARE, there will be more of this type of entertainment on Tuesday evening following the dinner that the Vice President and Mrs. Garner are planning for President and Mrs. Roosevelt. Although the Vice President recently has been staying in his apartment because of a

ALTHOUGH WASHINGTONIANS cry for it, it is perfectly obvious to us that the last thing anybody in this town wants is a rest. The minute things look as though they might begin to quiet down, there is a general shifting from Washington to those resort spots just getting into the stride of their social season. Whether or not you are a persistent complainer of "the rapid pace," or a frank lover of the continuous whirl, we can't blame you for wanting a change.

Mrs. Malcolm Matheson will be hostess to a house party at her home at Cocoanut Grove, Fla., during February and March. Her daughter, Julia Arnold, is already down there and will remain until March 15. Julia's husband, Skee Arnold, will join her this month as will also Kate Scully, who will visit them. Mrs. Matheson's other daughter and son-in-law, Peggy and Fairfax Randolph, left this week-end bound for Cocoanut Grove, and Emily and Millard West will leave shortly to complete what sounds like a knockout house party.

ALSO FLORIDA BOUND this month are Mrs. Carlos del Mar and her daughter, Liz Sturtevant, who will go to Miami Beach on the eighteenth for a two-week stay . . . Adelaide Henry left on the spur of the moment this past week for a ten-day visit in Palm Beach . . . Allie and Bishop Hill will leave the twenty-fifth of this month for a two-week stay in Miami Beach . . . And still further South is the destination of Mrs. McCeney Werlich and Miss Carolyn Nash, who are leaving this week for Mexico City. They plan to be gone about three weeks in all. Incidentally, Miss Nash is entertaining at tea this afternoon . . .

Nor are these all the trips in the offing. As a matter of fact we are beginning to wonder if there is something wrong with the home town since everybody is leaving it . . . Frances Mathews will go to New York to visit Charlotte Mayo Henry on the fifteenth for two weeks. Mary Lib Reyburn may go with her . . . At the same time Mrs. John Magruder will be leaving for Boston, whence she will go to Amherst to see her son, John, then to Vermont to do some skiing before returning at the end of two weeks. Agnes Magruder will be hostess at a buffet supper tonight, and Mrs. Magruder and Agnes will both entertain at a buffet supper on the twelfth . . . Bess Karrick left yesterday for a month's sojourn in Stockbridge, Mass. . . . Mrs. C. H. J. Becker, of Warrenton, is visiting in New York, Greenwich and Providence for two weeks. Daughter Doris and Houston Miller, along with Maggie Byrd, who is leading it, and Jacqueline Meredith will take part in the Virginia Cotillion in Alexandria on the tenth . . .

COMPENSATION for this mass departure from town comes in the pleasing guise of visitors. Polly Cooke Jones and husband, Lewis, who is assistant commercial attache in Athens, Greece, arrived here Wednesday after a two years' absence, for a prolonged visit with Polly's mother and sister, Mrs. Levi Cooke and Virginia. They will be here two or three months dividing their time between Washington and Baltimore, which is Lewis' home . . . Mrs. Robert MacNeil, wife of The MacNeil of Barra, will arrive here tomorrow for a short stay at the Sulgrave Club, where she will entertain a few friends at tea tomorrow afternoon . . . Mrs. Wilder Baker is visiting her brother and sister-in-law, Maj. and Mrs. David Barry, for a few days . . . Col. and Mrs. Littleton Waller, from Meadowbrook, Pa., are visiting Commander and Mrs. Beresford Waller . . . And Miss Elizabeth Taylor, from Little Rock, Ark., is visiting Anne Carter Greene . . .

HERE AND THERE:

Mrs. Millard Tydings went to New York this week-end to greet two members of her family and see two others embark. Rahel and Aldace Walker landed Friday after several months' visit in Brussels with Rahel's father, Ambassador Davies, followed by a whirl of winter sports at St. Moritz. Mrs. Emlen Davies and daughter, Emlen Knight, sailed yesterday on their South American cruise . . . Commander Hamilton Bryan and daughter, Anne, are skiing this week-end in the Poconos . . . The Howard Railleys, newcomers to Washington, have just taken a house in Alexandria. He is assistant to George Grant Mason, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority Board, and Mrs. Railley is the niece of Mrs. Mitchell Palmer . . . Mrs. Barron DuBois will give a tea on Friday for the Colonial Dames, of Washington . . . Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lincoln O'Brien will entertain at dinner on February 15.

Mary Adele Lehman To Be June Bride

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Lehman, of Woodside, Md., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Mary Adele, to Donald Vergne Potter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vergne W. Potter, of Washington. Both Miss Lehman and Mr. Potter are graduates of Central High School, and the bride-elect received her degree from the American University, where she was especially active in music.

Mr. Potter attended George Washington University and is now completing his senior year at National University Law School. Miss Lehman is a member of Delta Gamma National Fraternity, and a charter member of Cap and Gown, women's honorary fraternity at American University.

Mr. Potter has been initiated into Sigma Nu Phi Legal Fraternity and is a member of Beta Chi Sigma Social Fraternity. He is also a member of the Junior Board of Commerce of Washington.

Plans are being made for a June wedding.

About The Town

—With Dudley Harmon

WITH VALENTINE'S DAY about to roll along again, we are imbued with a "hearts and flowers" spirit and feel an urge to distribute gifts in the tradition of the venerated saint. Being also a firm believer in the theory that every home should have a book, we have selected as remembrances a number of volumes, modern and classic, which we give via this column, gratis and with love, to the following members of Capital society:

The British Ambassador and members of his staff: "Hands Across the Tea."

Representative Sol Bloom: "The American Way."

The Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki: "The Sheik."

Mrs. George Grant Mason, jr.: "The Return of the Native," or "As You Like it."

The Soviet Embassy: "Alone."

Clarence Hewes: Whitaker's Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage and Companionage.

Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss: "Music at Midnight."

Lady Lindsay, Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Mrs. Peter Gerry and Mr. and Mrs. Drew Pearson: "How to Raise a Dog: In the City and in the Suburbs."

Mrs. George Howe and Mrs. George T. Summerlin, jr.: "Fanny Farmer's Cook Book."

George Garrett: "Gentlemen Prefer Bonds."

Mrs. S. Kent Legare: "Costume and Fashion."

Myron Hofer and Andrew Wylie: "Life With Mother."

Mr. and Mrs. C. Mathews Dick: "Treasure Island."

The Marquis of Sant'Orsola: "The Woman's Almanac."

Miss Barbara Wright: "How the Other Half Lives."

Attorney General Frank Murphy: "The Importance of Being E(a)rnest."

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dewey: "Tale of Two Cities."

Mrs. Dolly Gann: "The Last of the Mohicans."

The Japanese Ambassador and his staff: "How to Win Friends and Influence People."

E. Pendleton Turner: "Cakes and Ale."

Mrs. Higginson Rogers: "Your Job."

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, jr.: "The Romantic Comedians."

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend: "Half Way in My Song."

Ralph Snowden Hill: "Bachelor Born."

Rebecca Wellington: "The Corpse With the Floating Foot," "Blood on the Carpet," "The Torso Case," "The Human Fiend" and other gories.

William C. Bullitt: "At Home Abroad."

Henry A. Wallace: "The Good Earth."

Frau Hans Thomsen: "Our Feathered Friends."

Beverly Moffett Becomes Bride Of John Mohan

Wed in St. Matthew's; She Is Daughter of Late Admiral

In the presence of members of the two families and intimate friends, Miss Beverly Moffett, daughter of Mrs. William A. Moffett, of 2019 Massachusetts avenue, and the late Rear Admiral Moffett, was married yesterday afternoon to Charles John Mohan, son of Mrs John F. Mohan, of Pittsburgh, and the late Dr. Mohan. The ceremony took palce at 3:30 o'clock in the sancristy of St. Matthew's Church, the Rev. Wilbur Wheeler officiating.

The bride wore a beige dress with matching coat and a brown hat of rough straw. A corsage of orchids completed her costume. She dispensed with attendants.

Maj. Al Williams, famous flier and aide to the late Admiral Moffett, was best man.

A small reception at the home of Mrs. Moffett followed the ceremony. Among the guests were Mrs. Mohan, Dr. John Mohan, of New York, brother of the bridegroom; Mrs. Elliott Macfarlane Moore, of Lakewood Village, Calif., the bride's sister; Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Ehret, of Philadelphia; George Dillingham, of Charleston, S. C., cousin of the bride; Martha Quinn, of Pittsburgh, uncle of Mr. Mohan; Dr. and Mrs. Edward Morse and Miss Hazel Edgar.

When she left for a wedding trip in the South, the bride wore a frock with a striped jacket and fuchsia skirt. On their return the couple will reside in Washington, where Mr. Mohan is connected with Pennsylvania Central Airlines.

The bride attended the Eastman and Maret Schools here and the Warrenton, Va., Country Day School. Mr. Mohan is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and also attended Notre Dame.

Clulow Couple In Cambridge

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Edward Clulow, jr., who were married January 28, are making their home in Cambridge, Mass., where Mr. Clulow is doing graduate work in law at Harvard.

The bride is the former Miss Mary Stuart Wilkinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Garland Wilkinson, of Cumberland, Va., and Mr. Clulow is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Clulow, of Tulsa, Okla.

Their wedding took place at the Mount Vernon Place Church, the Rev. John W. Rustin officiating. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white tulle with wide bands of lace trimming the skirt. Her Queen Mary veil of illusion was fingertip length and she carried white carnations and sweet peas.

Miss Elizabeth Wilkinson served as maid of honor for her sister, wearing a coral colored frock trimmed with gray net. The bridesmaids, the Misses Margaret and Dorothy Whitney, cousins of the bride, and Mildred Vaughan and Margaret Mathews wore dresses of violet net. All wore doll hats made of net rose petals and carried old-fashioned bouquets.

Mr. Clulow served as best man for his son, and the ushers were James Mott, jr., Wolcott Camp, John Ferguson and Ralph Marston.

A buffet supper for members of the bridal party and close friends followed at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. Milton Whitney.

The bride is a graduate of Blackstone College, Blackstone, Va., and for the past four years has been secretary of the welfare division of the American Legion in Washington. Mr. Clulow attended Tulsa University and George Washington University and Law School.

Anne Hemelt, John Singerhoff Married in Church Ceremony

Uncle of Bride Officiates at Nuptials in St. Gabriel's; Couple Departs on Trip To Florida After Wedding Breakfast

AT A CEREMONY yesterday morning in St. Gabriel's Church, Miss Anne Jennings Hemelt, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Francis Joseph Hemelt, became the bride of John Allen Singerhoff, son of Mrs. John B. Singerhoff and the late Mr. Singerhoff.

The Rev. Theodore M. Hemelt, uncle of the bride, officiated at the 11 o'clock ceremony, which took place before an altar banked with palms and white snapdragons and lighted with tall white tapers.

William Hanan, soloist, and Miss Catherine Weber, organist, gave a brief musical program prior to the ceremony and Miss Weber played the wedding music. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore her mother's bridal gown of ivory duchess satin and net with a court train. The bodice of old Renaissance period lace was set off with finely shirred net sleeves with ruching of lace on the wrists. The bridal veil, six yards long, was gathered to a headdress embroidered with pearls and orange blossoms. A bouquet of white camellias tied with satin ribbon completed the costume.

Miss Lenore Catherine Hemelt, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a frock of turquoise blue faille with a Mary-Queen-of-Scots bonnet faced with orchid velvet to match her slippers. Her old-fashioned bouquet was one of orchid sweet peas.

ANOTHER SISTER, Miss Grace Cecile Hemelt, was bridesmaid. Her gown of Florentine pink faille was accented with a quaint bonnet to match her gown, and she carried a colonial bouquet of Briarcliffe roses.

J. Joseph O'Donnell, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, was best man, and ushers included William J. Tobin, jr., Walter Wood, Frank Ortman and George Carroll, all of Washington.

Following the wedding there was a breakfast in the Carlton room at the Carlton Hotel. Mrs. Hemelt, the bride's mother, was gowned in wood violet crepe trimmed with gold pailletes embroidered into butterflies at the neckline. Her black hat was trimmed with flowers to blend with her frock.

Mrs. Singerhoff, the bridegroom's mother, wore black crepe with a matching hat and a corsage of white roses.

AFTER THE breakfast the couple left for a wedding trip through the South and Florida. For her traveling costume Mrs. Singerhoff wore a coral wool crepe dress, with a brown straw hat, fur coat and accessories to match. Mr. and Mrs. Singerhoff will make their home in Washington.

Out-of-town guests at the wedding included Mrs. John J. Groeninger, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Groeninger, William J. Groeninger and Charles T. Hemelt, Mr. and Mrs. Girard V. Hemelt and Miss Anna Goldback, all of Baltimore; Mr. and Mrs. Harold J. O'Keefe, of Cambridge, Md.; Mr. and Mrs. David B. Singerhoff and Miss Jane Singerhoff, of Elmira, N. Y.

The former Miss Hemelt is a graduate of Immaculata Seminary and Trinity College. Mr. Singerhoff is an alumnus of St. John's College and attended George Washington and Columbus universities. He now is on the editorial staff of The Washington Post.

Ream-Baird Nuptials Are Celebrated

Washington Girl Becomes Bride of Michigan Man

CULMINATING A ROMANCE that began three years ago in Fort Wayne, Ind., Miss Ruth Alice Ream, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Forest V., Ream, of Washington, was married yesterday afternoon to Charles A. Baird, son of Mrs. Charles H. Baird, of Holly, Mich.

The ceremony took place at St. James Episcopal Chapel in Garrett Park, Md., at 2:30 in the afternoon, and the Rev. D. Wade Safford officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was gowned in a violet crepe frock, fashioned street length, on princess lines, with long sleeves, which were puffed at the shoulder and came to points at the wrist; and a high draped neckline. A tiny doll hat of black with violets and a violet face veil completed the costume, and her corsage was of orchids.

PAUL REAM, brother of the bride, was the best man. There were no other attendants. Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pressly Baldridge at 6505 Maple avenue in Chevy Chase, Md. Mr. and Mrs. Armand de Birney, aunt and uncle of the bride, assisted at the reception.

After a motor trip the couple will make their home at the Northumberland Apartments, 2039 New Hampshire avenue northwest.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Flynn, of New York; Mrs. Arthur Kover,, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and Mrs. Charles H. Baird, of Holly, Mich. Representative and Mrs. George W. Gillie, of Indiana, were among the guests.

THE BRIDE attended George Washington University and is a member of Pi Beta Phi Sorority. She and her parents formerly made their home in Fort Wayne, Ind.

Mr. Baird attended Michigan State College and the University of Michigan, where he graduated in 1935. He is a member of the Sigma Delta Chi Fraternity, is a former resident of Fort Wayne, Ind., and was a member of the editorial staff of the Fort Wayne News Sentinel. He resigned last December to become secretary to Representative Gillie.

Miss Gene Cox is One Of New Capitol Faces

By Elizabeth Ford.

IF CONGRESS WERE on Broadway instead of Capitol Hill, there most likely would be a big electric sign scorching around the dome with the announcement, "Full Houses . . . A New Face Every Minute." One of the newest faces this season was that of pretty Miss Gene Cox, who had human-interest editors grinding out reams of copy about her when she did a very neat turn as page-girl for a day.

She's out of politics now, and spending most of her time at the Maret School near Connecticut avenue, but her ambition some time in the future is to follow in her father's footsteps. He, as you recall, is Representative Eugene Cox, of Georgia. When she gets to college, she wants to specialize in journalism as well as civics.

The Coxes, by the way, will have visiting them next week-end their son-in-law and other daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Elliot Dunwody, of Macon, Ga.

ANY TIME YOU CALL the office of Representative John Kee, of West Virginia, and ask to speak to his secretary, you'll be speaking to Mrs. Kee, who is a helpmate in the office as well as in the home. Not only does she double-brass in shorthand, but she finds time (her method is a secret) to write a weekly column about our Nation's fair city. It is called "Here and There in Washington" and appears in 23 West Virginia newspapers.

MRS. ROBERT B. Chiperfield, wife of the Representative from Ohio, is an authority on blizzards, or, at least she ought to be. When Representative Chiperfield rushed to Washington for the opening of Congress, Mrs. Chiperfield commandeered the family car and decided to take her trip to the Capital by easy stages. She drove first of all from Canton, Ohio, where they now make their home, to Arkansas, where she used to make hers.

There she ran into this spell of slippery weather you've been hearing about. After several weeks of snow, ice and assorted wind, she decided to give the car the reins and recently joined her husband at the Fairfax Hotel.

ADD TO THE LIST of Senate daughters who help out on Capitol Hill, Miss Kathleen Bulow, daughter of Senator and Mrs. William J. Bulow, of South Dakota. She was graduated from George Washington University last June.

By the way again: Senator and Mrs. Bulow have had as house guests during the week Mr. and Mrs. George Booth, of Sioux City, Iowa.

Speaking of Senate daughters brings us right along to their colleagues in the House.

The Daughters of the House, a group which was formed in January, 1937, got together for the first time this year at a meeting last week. Two years ago there were about 15 members. Now the roll call is 40. In 1937, they first met at the home of Miss Betty Lou Massingale, now Mrs. Hugn Nelson, the daughter of Representative and Mrs. Sam C. Massingale, of Oklahoma.

Other "veterans" of the group are Miss Gladys Kitchens, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Wade H. Kitchens, of Arkansas; Miss Patricia Houston, daughter of Representative and Mrs. John M. Houston, of Kansas; Miss Reba Doughton, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina; and Miss Frances Boykin, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Frank W. Boykin, of Alabama.

DID YOU KNOW before now . . .

That Senator James H. Hughes, of Delaware, taught school for four years and that he began to do so at the age of 16?

That Representative Robert L. Mouton, of Louisiana, owns and operates a large azalea and camellia-japonica nursery at Lafayette, La.? And that he's spoken to garden clubs all over the country?

Lieut. John Wood Weds Mary Robeson

Mrs. John Wood, of Luray, Va., is in Blacksburg, where she attended the marriage of her granddaughter, Miss Mary Evans Robeson, to Lieht. John Dudley Wood, son of Mrs. C. Dudley Wood. The bride is a daughter of Dr. Frank Leigh Robeson, a member of the V. P. I. faculty at Blacksburg. The wedding took place in Christ's Episcopal Church, Blacksburg, February 3.

The couple will sail from New York Tuesday for the Philippine Islands.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman A. Eavey, prominent in the social life of northern Virginia, have announced the approaching marriage of their daughter, Lucile Lydia, to Harold W. Crawford, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Crawford, of Waynesboro. No definite date has been set for the marriage, but it will take place early in the spring.

Alexandria Preparing For Cotillion

Pageantry of Early Days to Be Revived Friday Evening

THE PAGEANTRY of colorful colonial days will return to Alexandria Friday evening with the annual Virginia Cotillion. The event is a revival of Gen. George Washington's birthday ball which was once held in Gadsby's Tavern.

Committee members, as well as patronesses for the dance, are descendants of distinguished Virginia men who gathered at Gadsby's to do Washington honor.

PATRONESSES from the Capital include Mrs. Robert E. Lee and Mrs. D. Buchanan Merryman. Mrs. Lee is the widow of Col. Lee, who bore the name of his famous uncle, the Confederate leader. Mrs. Lee lived as a bride at the Lees' famous estate, Ravenworth, near Alexandria. Mrs. Merryman is a descendant of Peter Montague, who came from England to settle in the New World.

From Baltimore, Mrs. James R. Herbert Boone, Mrs. Pinkney Whyte and Mrs. Tunstall Smith are patronesses. All trace their families back to the original founders of Alexandria. Mrs. Smith, before her marriage, was Miss Josephine Fairfax and is a sister of the present Lord Albert Fairfax, of London. Mrs. Boone and her cousin, Mrs. Whyte, are both descendants of William Herbert and John Carlyle, of Alexandria. The latter was a son-in-law of William Fairfax, and himself heir to a title.

MRS. CHARLES R. HOOFF, a member of the cotillion committee, is a sister of Mrs. Whyte and still lives in the city her ancestors founded. Serving with her is another Alexandrian, Mrs. Charles Alexandria Swann Sinclair, who is a direct descendant of John Alexander, for whom the city is named.

The other two members of the committee are Mrs. John S. Barbour and Mrs. Frederick Richardson. The latter is responsible for the revival of the once-famous cotillion and is a descendant of the Randolphs, Bollings, Lees and Princess Pocahontas.

Others from Alexandria sponsoring the dance are Mrs. Joseph Crockett, who traces her line back to George Mason and Thomas Jefferson; and Mrs. Robert M. Reese. Mrs. Reese's ancestor, Maj. Dennis Ramsey, was an intimate friend of Gen. Washington, and his home, where Washington dined, is famous as the oldest house in Alexandria.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

J. MACKENZIE TABB, JR., and Hugh Kerr, of Middleburg, joint masters of the V. M. I. Hunt Club, at Lexington, Va., have accepted an invitation for members of the college hunt, from the Deep Run Hunt at Richmond to hunt with the latter's pack on Saturday, February 18, at 3 p. m. The drag course to be used for the event will be announced later by Dr. John M. Hughes, M. F. H. of Deep Run Hunt. There will be one of the largest fields of the season riding that day, and a number of members of the V. M. I. Club of Richmond will follow the hunt by the roads in motor cars. The uniforms of the V. M. I. men, the pink coats of the Deep Run Hunt members and the formal black habits worn by the women will make the event a most colorful affair. The visiting hunt and those following hounds will be entertained at the club after hunting with a hunt breakfast.

Mackenzie Tabb and Hugh Kerr will bring a number of members of V. M. I. Hunt to Middleburg early in March—the date has not been set—to follow hounds with Daniel C. Sands, M. F. H. of Middleburg Hunt.

BOWLING HAS been a popular pastime for hunting people since hunting has been at a standstill on account of the weather. Old and young alike have been gathering at the bowling alley to amuse themselves and to get exercise. Among those seen bowling were Mrs. Victor duPont, Mrs. Arthur White, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Skinner, Miss Willett Leach, Miss Bettina Belmont, Mrs. Charles Sabin, Stephen Clark, Mike Kerr, James McCormick, Harris Bucklin, Ridgeley White, Ollie Iselin, jr., Van Cushman, and Harrison Baird.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Massie, of Easton, Md., spent several days in Middleburg recently. The Massies formerly lived in Middleburg. William Hulbert entertained in their honor at dinner at his home, Stone Hedge, on Monday night. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Harry Frost, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur White, and James B. Skinner.

Miss Grace Dickson, of Fairfield, Conn., and Miss Helen Lipscomb, of Leesburg, who are attending the Maderia School, are spending the week-end at Miss Lipscomb's home, Raspberry Plain, near Leesburg.

PAUL MELLON is planning to have an old-fashioned point-to-point race over his estate, Rokeby, between Middleburg and Upperville in the Piedmont Hunt territory, some time the latter part of February. A committee meeting of Dr. A. C. Randolph, M. F. H. of Piedmont Hunt; Daniel C. Sands, M. F. H. of Middleburg Hunt; Fletcher Harper, M. F. H. of Orange County Hunt, and Paul Mellon will be held this week, when they will lay out rules for the event. Point-to-point races were revived in Virginia by Frederick Prince, jr., several years ago. He gave silver cups to the Warrenton Hunt for two races. Since then practically all hunts in Virginia and Maryland which annually held hunter trials toward the end of their hunting season have given these up for the point-to-point races, which were held annually in hunting countries in days gone by.

Mrs. Frank M. Dillard, of Alexandria, spent Wednesday in Middleburg as the guest of Mrs. Daniel C. Sands.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fred have returned from Charleston, S. C., where they have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. William P. Montague.

Mrs. Rosemary Ward, of New York, has arrived at her home near Middleburg for the rest of the hunting season.

Col. and Mrs. William Clifford, of Chudleigh Farm, have gone to Puerto Rico for a month.

White House Program Proves Notable One

severe cold, latest reports have it that plans are going ahead for the dinner; and everybody fortunate enough to be invited is hoping it will go off on schedule. While the Garners entertain rarely, their parties have made some lively pages in Washington's social history.

The largest dinner given by President and Mrs. Roosevelt this season was the one honoring the Chief Justice and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes. There, the new justice, Felix Frankfurter, and Mrs. Frankfurter had a sizeable share of the spotlight that played over the company of 93 guests during the evening.

New high-ranking officials have added interest to several receptions and dinners at the White House this year. The Attorney General, Frank Murphy, made his "debut" in his new capacity at the reception for the judiciary. Arriving ten minutes late caused the event to get off to a tardy start, but that didn't keep him from being the man of the hour.

The new Secretary of Commerce, Harry Hopkins, was part of the Cabinet "parade" for the first time at the reception for officials in Government departments, and was one of the most popular guests in the red room that evening. But the man who really stole the show both then and at the Congressional reception was the Postmaster General, James A. Farley, who held a court of his own—and a big one at that—during the entire party, both times.

THE TENSE international situation had its effect on both the functions planned for diplomats at the White House this season. Ten Ambassadors, including the dean of the Diplomatic Corps, Sir Ronald Lindsay, and six Ministers were missing at the reception for the foreign corps, and even more envoys were absent from the diplomatic dinner. Both events were big enough, however, with almost 1,000 guests flocking to the White House for the reception; 90 in the company for dinner, and several hundred Washington residents coming in later for the musicale that featured Mischa Elman, violinist, and Helen Jepson, singer.

The Congressional reception, which usually stacks up no special honors either as to size or glamor, was more diverting this season than in some time. New faces in the Senate and House added an extra fillip of interest to the occasion. Incidentally, this was the only formal function at the Executive Mansion this year when almost half the male contingent turned out in dinner jackets rather than "white ties and tails."

IN SOME instances, entire State delegations got together ahead of time and arrived, down to the last man, in tuxedos. One Representative declared he could never get re-elected if his constituents found out he was spending his money on a full dress suit. Another said he couldn't afford one; still another said he had "never worn a monkey" suit and never expected to do so.

At Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference a few days later, the First Lady was asked her opinion about whether members of Congress should "do as the Romans do" in the manner of dress and wear white ties and tails to the White House just as men at the other parties do. She refused to commit herself on the subject; said simply that guests could dress as they please.

Personally, I can't see why any member of Congress can't afford a full dress suit. Maybe there's not much occasion "back home" to wear one. But this is Washington. And a formal invitation to the White House still indicates white tie attire.

MRS. LAWRENCE TOWNSEND'S morning musicales will wind up for the season tomorrow when Lotte Lehmann and Lawrence Melchior will be featured artists on a program that should be of red-letter proportions.

Everybody with a capital "E" will be at the Mayflower in the morning to hear the famous singers in their fourth appearance together. Following the concert, Mrs. Townsend will entertain at her usual luncheon, but she will not have among her guests Miss Lehmann. The latter is in deep mourning, her husband having died recently. Mr. Melchior and his wife will attend the luncheon, however, and will be feted at a number of other events during their Capital visit. Tomorrow afternoon, they will be guests of honor at a large tea given by Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, and tomorrow evening, they will be feted at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Sims.

Mrs. Townsend will go to Baltimore on Tuesday to hear Rosa Ponzelle and will go on from there to New York to attend the debut of Mme. Dosia, who will make her debut at Town Hall on Wednesday. Mme. Dosia, "the glamor girl of Chicago opera," was recently presented here.

Of Service Note:

Admiral Conard's Wife Acts, Writes Plays and Directs Them

While One Hand Has Rocked the Cradle For Her Six Children, the Other Has Been Active in the Drama

By Elizabeth Henney

THERE WAS NO DOUBT about it. The girl could act, and what is more, she could organize and direct. Her family discovered that when she was just a tot, and by the time she was 18, she was not only acting in various capacities, but organizing groups of players and directing plays, with great success.

Now she sandwiches her hobby of directing in between the job of being an admiral's wife, for Mrs. Charles Conard is the wife of Rear Admiral Conard, the Paymaster General of the Navy.

After her early acting career, she went in for Shakespearean drama during her years at Wellesley. Then she took a bit of time out from acting to marry and have six children. During that time, while one hand rocked the cradle, the other hand was busy writing plays—children's plays, for the most part—and she trained her young ones to be the cast.

AMONG HER WORKS are "Godmother to the Rescue" and "A Yedo Flower," the latter being a play with a Japanese background. Now that the children are grown and four daughters married, she has gone back to her hobby. Just recently Mrs. Conard was persuaded to put on a play for the Washington Club and it was such a success that her D. A. R. chapter (the Mary Washington Chapter) has persuaded her to repeat it on February 14. It will be given again at the same club. "The Florist Shop" is the title, and with her daughter, Miss Barbara Conrad, heading the all-Navy cast, the others will be Lieut. Onnie Lattu, Commander Frank C. Dunham, Mrs. Howard Shaffer and Lieut. Norman A. Helfrich.

ARMY NEWS: Service women who do things . . . A number of service wives, Army, Navy and Marine Corps, have been doing their bit for young feminine America by serving on the Girl Scout Council. Among them are Mrs. Edward Goring Bliss (Army), Mrs. Benjamin Cheatham (Army), Mrs. Amos A. Fries (Army), Mrs. Adolphus Staton (Navy) and Mrs. Edward Sturdevant (Marine Corps).

'Tis rumored that out at Fort Myer during the President's Horse Show, Errol Flynn, that swashbuckling, smart-cracking adventurer of the screen, won the admiration of the hard-boiled Calvary officers for his modest manners and lack of braggadocio! . . . They even allowed that they thought he sat his horse pretty well . . . from the Calvary, that came! . . . Errol can really puff up his chest and strut now!

On Saturday, February 18, there will be another Fort Myer junior dance.

Maj. Gen. Robert M. Danford, Chief of Field Artillery, was the guest of honor at a Yale dinner for the class of 1917 last Thursday, and the speaker of the evening also.

NAVY NOTES: Capt. and Mrs. D. F. Ducey will have an "at home" tomorrow afternoon from 5 to 7 . . . On Sunday, February 12, next Sunday, you know, the class of 1920 are really going to get together for that long-promised—or threatened—class party. It will be at the Army-Navy Country Club from 4:30 to 6:30.

On Friday there was another Navy Hop at the Sail Loft, with the usual attendance of a couple of thousand or so. In the receiving line were Capt. and Mrs. E. W. Brown, Commander and Mrs. E. M. Riley and Lieut. Comdr. Harley F. Cope.

A number of people entertained at dinner before the dance. Among them were Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. A. J. Couble, Capt. and Mrs. E. W. Brown, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. W. Crouch, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Harley F. Cope, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. W. B. McHugh, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. G. Fullenwider, Capt. and Mrs. G. F. Clark, Comdr. and Mrs. L. F. Safford, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. P. Abernathy, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Bay, Comdr. and Mrs. Louis Dreller, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. F. Helmkamp, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. P. E. Pendleton, Capt. and Mrs. Harry A. Ellsworth.

THE MARINE SITUATION: Maj. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, Commandant of the Marine Corps, was the ranking guest on Thursday evening at a dinner given by Capt. and Mrs. Cornelius P. Van Ness, before the Army-Navy reception at the White House.

Other guests at the dinner were Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Seth Williams, Miss Elizabeth Ray Williams, Capt. Robert H. Williams and Capt. Robert E. Hill.

Fredericksburg Girl to Wed Today In Atlantic City

A number of Fredericksburgers are in Atlantic City to attend the wedding today of Miss Rita Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Miller, of Fredericksburg, to Harry Miller, of Atlantic City. The ceremony will take place in the President Hotel. Miss Miller will have her sister, Mrs. S. L. Carpel, of Washington, as her only attendant.

Miss Jo Lee Fleet is spending this week-end at Washington and Lee University, where she attended the fancy dress ball. She is the guest of James Hubert Price, jr., son of Gov. and Mrs. Price.

Miss Vivian Schlemmer left yesterday for Florida, where she joined her aunt, Miss Alice Vivian, of Bay Shore, Long Island, for a stay of several weeks.

Miss Virginia Gately, daughter of Mrs. Louise Gately, will leave tomorrow to enter the Pratt Institute of Fine and Applied Art, in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Harry Lowes To Make Home In Washington

Couple Married in Church Ceremony At Philadelphia

OF INTEREST to Washington residents is the marriage of Miss Pauline Fleury Roome, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. William Oscar Roome, jr., of Philadelphia, and Harry Lincoln Lowe, jr., which took place last evening in the Church of the Messiah, Philadelphia. The bride's father, who formerly was rector of Emmanuel Church here, now is rector of the church in which the wedding ceremony was performed. He officiated.

BRIDESMAIDS were Miss Marjorie Ann Davis, Miss Louise Taylor, Miss Janet Lowe, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Constance Russell, of Washington, and Mrs. James McClintock, of South Orange, N. J. All were attired in taffeta frocks of rainbow shades with hats of the same color.

Helen Jane Chandler, dressed in a quaint costume of pink taffeta trimmed in blue, was the flower girl.

Robert Lowe was best man for his brother, and ushers included Wallace M. Pennepacker, James McClintock, jr., of South Orange; Fred W. Tarver, Alton Dilliplane and Edward P. Schmidt.

MRS. ROOME, mother of the bride, was gowned in rose chiffon. Her hat blended with the shade of her dress. Mrs. Lowe, the bridegroom's mother, wore a frock of lace and a corsage of orchids.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowe, who now are on their wedding trip, will make their home in Washington. The bride is a graduate of Temple University and recently has been associated with the duPont Co. in Wilmington. Mr. Lowe attended the Drexel Institute of Technology and is now employed by the Government.

Miss Dorothy Evans, Glen Rose Will Wed

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Elizabeth Evans, daughter of Elmer Evans, of Takoma Park, Md., to Glen Rose, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Rose, of Washington. No date has been set for the wedding.

Miss Evans and Mr. Rose were graduated from the University of Maryland in 1937. Miss Evans is a member of Alpha Xi Delta Sorority.

Myrta Dutton Williams Married In All Saints' Episcopal Church; Ceremony Performed by the Rector

MR. AND MRS. JOHN M. SPENCE, who were married last evening in All Saints' Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase circle, will make their home in Buckingham, Va. The ceremony was performed by the rector, the Rev. Henry Teller Cocke. Vases of spring blossoms were placed on the altar and tall ferns and palms formed the background in the chancel.

The bride is the former Miss Myrta Dutton Williams, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Karl D. Williams, of Chevy Chase. She was given in marriage by her father, and wore her mother's wedding gown of rich cream white satin, the round yoke trimmed in duchess lace. The sleeves were leg o' mutton style and the flared skirt terminated in a train. The tulle veil was arranged with orange blossoms which had adorned her mother's veil. White orchids were placed in the prayer book, which her mother also had carried.

Miss Helen Louise Black, of Country Club Hills, Va., as maid of honor, wore a long full-skirted gown of periwinkle blue chiffon, with square neck and short puffed sleeves. Her flowers were pink roses and purple iris. The bridesmaids, Miss Sally Jumper and Miss Virginia Clark, wore pink marquisette dresses, trimmed in lace of the same shade. The necks were high with round collars and the sleeves were short and puffed. Their arm bouquets were of spring flowers. All three attendants wore horsehair hats, tied at the back with periwinkle velvet, and each wore pink lace mitts.

The best man was Alan T. Diebert, and Walter Peter, jr., Robert Loney, Joseph Kohler and Grail Edson were ushers.

FOLLOWING THE ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Williams entertained at a supper at Wardman Park Hotel for members of the wedding party and the out-of-town guests. Mrs. Williams wore sapphire blue velvet. Mrs. Tench T. Marye, or Arlington, Va., mother of the bridegroom, wore black crepe.

Out-of-town guests were Mrs. Walter Rossmassler, Germantown, Pa., Miss Mary Frieland, Riverton, N. J.; Mrs. J. Thompson Cole and Miss Anne Lee Cole, Jenkintown, Pa.; Fred J. Doolittle, Miss Margaret Doolittle, Mr. and Mrs. James F. Doolittle and Miss Dorcas D. Bastian, all of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. J. Gilmore Wilson, Malvern, Pa.; Louis C. Williams and Mrs. William Jennings, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mrs. J. G. Billmeyer.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Miles, of Jocelyn street, are in New York, where they are visiting their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Daffron, jr., and Thomas Daffron 3d, born last week. Mrs. Daffron was formerly Miss Kitty Miles. Mrs. Miles will spend several weeks with her daughter.

MRS. HENRY DeC. ADAMS returned last evening from Richmond, Va., where she visited her son, Randal Adams. Mrs. James Craig Peacock returned earlier in the week from New York where she was the guest of her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Grover C. Kerly.

Mr. and Mrs. Karl Fenning have as their guests at their home in the Chevy Chase Apartments Mrs. Fenning's sister, Mrs. F. J. B. Healy, and her daughter, Miss Emeria Healy, of Cobh, County Cork, Ireland.

Chaco War Veterans In Diplomatic Drama

Col. Acosta, of Bolivia, and Gen. Estigarribia Nearly Meet in Pathologist's Office; Pair Fought In War; Former Would 'Bury Hatchet'

By Nancy Archibald.

A DRAMATIC moment occurring at the office of a well-known pathologist in Washington can be described in stage-hand terms as follows: Action in rapid succession—exit patient Lieut. Col. Victor M. Acosta, of Bolivia; enter patient Gen. Felix Estigarribia, of Paraguay . . . Though the military men fought bitterly against each other during the Chaco War, they were friends long before, and young Col. Acosta longs for a friendly meeting with the Paraguayan Minister when he can "bury the hatchet." . . . The Acostas have been in Washington several months now, and have been delighted by the keen interest in Pan Americanism shown by Capital society. Tall and graceful Senora de Acosta is looking for a studio where she can continue her study of painting, and tiny 3-year-old Maria Eugenia Beatrice, who inherits her mother's blue eyes and blonde curls, is a ballet enthusiast.

COCKTAIL CHATTER: Ra, the Siamese cat with the Siamese name, and who belongs to the Colombian Ambassador, stole the show at Dr. Ortega's lecture on Bogota last week by walking 'neath the legs of the audience, proudly waving his tail aloft . . . finally to be carried offstage, screaming with outraged dignity, by the Ambassador's pretty daughter, Rosario . . . And the buzz of discussion on Hitler's speech at a diplomatic housewarming halted in midair at the arrival of Counselor Thomsen of the German Embassy . . . The disastrous earthquake in Chile will delay the departure of popular Counselor and Senora de Huneeus for a litle while at least . . . And the former Air Attache of that Embassy, Commander Puga, is now Air Chief for his government . . . With the arrival of the newly appointed Brazilian Ambassador, Senhor Carlos Martins Pereira e Souza, and, always provided Foreign Minister Aranha's visit lives up to expectations, the staff will be increased and work doubled . . . Look for a series of brilliant entertainments guided by the lovely hand of Mme. Pereira.

MUSICALE MEMOIRS: Recalling how la Comtesse de Gramont dropped in at Mrs. Townsend's morning concert just long enough to hear the songs of her countrywoman, Greek Mlle. Elen Dosia and the Marquis Capomazza dashed in from the Italian Embassy just too late to hear his favorite Strauss waltz rendered by an old friend, Gaspard Cassado, a pro-Franco Spaniard . . . Speak- of the Italian Embassy, a new secretary, Signor Nichetti, is expected soon. Whether he will replace Prince del Drago, whose engagement has delighted Washington friends, or whether Benedetto Capomazza is slated to exchange posts is not yet certain . . . Other glamour lads who threaten to leave for foreign parts are Baron "Kepi" Schell, of Hungary; Michal "waltz king" Budny, of Poland, and Ivan "Heidelberg" Zlatin, of Bulgaria.

THE MARCH LION this year will be Anis Azer, of Egypt, who returns to the United States for the third time to be First Secretary at the Legation. Will he settle down like a lamb to his bridge and dancing for which he was famed when he was Charge d'Affaires here several years ago, or has his stay in history-laden Berlin changed his nature? Except for season's greetings little has been heard from this doughty Egyptian by his Washington friends. His career reads quite like a travel pamphlet—first stop, Consul in New York, then Secretary to Greece, Turkey, the United States, Germany and return trip to America.

BENIGN BOOK-LOVER Alfonso Reyes, Mexican Ambassador-at-Large, who looks so like Walter Connolly in one of his happier cinema roles, stopped by at the recent cocktail party given by Senora de Ghiraldo, wife of the Argentine Counselor, in honor of Dolly Corbin. Dr. Reyes was accompanied by his good friend and comrade, Senora de Reyes, whose black tam-like hat with azure-blue bird perched on the side was the envy of every woman at the party . . . Somehow the Ambassador found himself deep in discussion with Argentine Naval Attache Godoy on the merits of Mexican hand-wrought silver.

"Indians are artists," Don Reyes declared. "I will tell you about one who was Benvenuto Cellini himself. When Dwight Morrow was Envoy from the United States to Mexico, he built and furnished a house in typical Mexican style at the favorite resort just an hour's drive from Mexico City, Cuernavaca. Well, one day at the humble house of a peon he found and bought a finely worked piece of silver. Shortly afterward he returned and said to the Indian: 'I like that silver plate so well I want to order 24 just like it. How much will you charge?'

"Pondering a few moments, the Indian gave a price for each one that was higher than the cost of the original piece. 'How is this?' Mr. Morrow asked with some slight indignation, "I buy a large quanity and you raise your rate. In the United States the more you buy the less it costs.'

"'Oh, replied the silver artist, in Mexico it is just the opposite. I liked very well creating that first piece, but I know I shall soon be very bored making 24 exactly matching it.'"

Miss Marvin-Smiths' Wedding Plans Made

Francis C. Almirall, of Washington, will be best man at the wedding of Miss Madeleine Marvin-Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Valentine Smith, of Rye, N. Y., to his brother, Joseph Janer Almirall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond F. Almirall, of New York.

The ceremony will take place February 18 at St. Mary's Church, Greenwich, Conn. The bride will be attended by her sister, Miss Oramella Marvin-Smith. A reception at the Smith home will follow the ceremony.

Three Dances To Be Held in Charlottesville

All Will Be Staged In Memorial Gym; 2 Orchestras to Play

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 4.—Midwinter dances at the University of Virginia February 8, 10 and 11 will attract to Charlottesville an unusually large number of visitors.

All the dances will be held in the Memorial Gymnasium under joint sponsorship of the half-century old German Club and P-K Society. "Bunny" Bergnan's Orchestra will play for the opening dance, while Tommy Dorsey's Orchestra will be heard Friday and Saturday nights.

Members of the two dance societies will take part in a formal figure at midnight Friday night. This will be led by Randolph Garnett, Norfolk, president of the P-K Society, with Miss Viola R. James, of Charlotte, N. C., and Robert C. Watts, jr., Lynchburg, Va., president of the German Club, with Miss Barbara Bloomer, Louisville, Ky.

The Thursday and Friday evening dances will be formal, the Saturday closing dance informal. Several athletic events will add interest to the week-end. The chief athletic attraction will be the Saturday night boxing match between the United States Naval Academy and the University of Virginia. Members of the Naval Academy boxing team will be guests for the dance after the bouts.

More than the usual number of dinners and private parties have been planned for the period of the festivities. Some of these will be held at the Farmington Club, some at the Monticello Hotel, others at fraternity houses or at private homes in Charlottesville or in Albemarle County.

New Handbook Holds Tips For Shoppers

Information for the woman shopper is presented in concise form in a handbook titled "Scientific Consumer Purchasing" just issued in a revised edition by the American Association of University Women.

Two new chapters, "Prices and the Consumer's Interest" and "Consumer Co-operatives as a Means of Supplying Consumer Needs," are included by the reviser, Alice L. Edwards, former executive secretary of the American Home Economics Association and member of the A. A. U. W. committee on social studies.

Informative selling, informative advertising, informative labeling are stressed throughout the book.

"It is not generally recognized that the apparent caprice of women's buying results in part from the fact that they are unable to procure accurate descriptions of the construction and performance of goods displayed for sale," the handbook says.

Manufacturer as well as consumer would profit by the more informative method, the book holds, remarking: "It is significant that the advertising manager of a large mail order house has reported that whenever specifications for a commodity appeared in a catalogue sales of that commodity increased."

Another argument is: "The appearance of such phrases as 'thread count,' 'octane rating' and 'will not shrink over 1 per cent' in advertising and on labels indicates that manufacturers are realizing that wide-awake consumers appreciate the value of precise descriptions and standards."

Poet to Speak At Dinner Here

Oscar Williams, poet and editor, of New York City, has been announced by Mrs. Horace Torbert as speaker for the dinner to be given Wednesday for winners in the annual poetry contest of the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women.

Mrs. Torbert, chairman of the A. A. U. W. contest for undergraduates in local colleges, will preside at a dinner which will be given at 1634 I street at 7 p. m. The winners of the contest will be announced.

Mr. Williams' poems have appeared currently in both American and English literary magazines. He was recently awarded a prize by the Poetry Society of America. Mr. Williams will speak on marketing poetry and will read from his own works.

The judges of the contest were Miss Ruth Henderson, chairman; Mrs. Vernon Kellogg and Gustav Davidson.

The art appreciation group of the A. A. U. W. is sponsoring a memorial service in honor of Benjamin H. Latrobe, nineteenth century architect, at St. John's Church Friday at 5 p. m., to which the general public is invited. The group has been studying the work of Latrobe and is climaxing its study with a service in the church he designed.

Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's, will preside, assisted by Thomas T. Waterman, architect with the Historic American Building Survey. Mr. Waterman, who has been assisting architect in the restoration work at Williamsburg, is author of "Early Virginia Houses" and a new book on colonial houses is scheduled to appear soon.

There will be special organ music. A poem written by Latrobe for the original dedication over a hundred years ago will be read.

Mrs. Cecil Wise Honored at Shower In Great Mills

Mrs. Cecil Wise, formerly Miss Mary Darnell, was the guest of honor at a shower recently given her by friends at Great Mills, where she and her husband reside. Forty guests were present.

Mrs. Edward Waring was hostess to eight guests at luncheon and bridge on Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Jesse Norris was hostess to a number of guests at supper and bridge on Wednesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dyson, of Great Mills, entertained at a buffet supper on Tuesday evening.

Mrs. George Lawrence, of Bushwood, near Leonardstown, Md., was hostess to a number of guests at luncheon and bridge Wednesday afternoon.

Phi Delta Gamma Banquets Here

Beta Chapter of Phi Delta Gamma, national sorority for graduate women of George Washington University, held its initiation and banquet last night at the Carlton Hotel. The room was decorated with the sorority colors, black, white and gold, candles and flowers on the table and corsage bouquets for the initiates carrying out the color scheme.

The new members are Katharine Asbury, Marguerite Atchison, Caroline Babb, Agnes Carlin, Clarita Claussen, Bertha Gay, Fern Hull, Mary Macina, Elizabeth Oskin, Helen Roberts, Ruth Sangster, Dorothy Veon and Mary Warren.

Miss Mildred Green, president of Beta Chapter, welcomed the new members, and during the dinner toasts were offered to Phi Delta Gamma by Margaret Gibson, Marian Scott and Helen Fadden.

A social hour followed the banquet. A piano solo was given by Hazel Borden; Florence Rice gave several readings, and a skit entitled "Club Tea" was presented.

Arrangements for the party were made by Elizabeth Fielden, Gladys Anderson, Florence Sifford and Priscilla Holcomb.

Evelyn Davis, well-known dancer, will speak to the group this afternoon at its regular meeting at Columbian House, Twenty-first and G streets, at 3 o'clock. Hostesses for the tea afterward will be Helen Louise Trembley, chairman; Florence Rice, Alice Helen Moore, Mary Henderson, Marian Scott and Laskey Howard.

Southern Stelos

"SAID ONE LITTLE STOCKING TO ANOTHER" . . . "Running around used to make me tired and angry . . . but now a run more or less doesn't even aggravate me . . . for I'm sent to SOUTHERN STELOS—pronto—for repairs." So don't feel too badly when your lovely pair of sheer chiffon hose gets a run or a snag. It's remarkable how quickly and skillfully they can be re-knit. Only 15c for the first (short) thread run; 20c for the first (long) thread run; 5c for each additional thread run. Look over your "private stock" and if you've several pairs that need "doctoring" hurry them to SOUTHERN STELOS, 613 12TH ST.

Gude's

"MR. CUPID ON A SIT-DOWN STRIKE" . . . HEADLINES for the fellow who won't send his girl flowers for Valentine's Day. Now I don't say that GUDE BROS had anything to do with the origin of Feb. 14th, but I can't imagine a Valentine's Day without having them very much in evidence. Each year they pop out with new floral designs in corsages, bouquets, Indoor Gardens . . . to be given as Valentine gifts . . . but this year they've surpassed all previous ones . . . for never have I seen such exquisite creations as they are preparing to have for your selection as Valentine Remembrances. Drop in and see these lovely posies or call them to send one out for you . . . Don't forget GUDE BROS., DI. 8450.

The Shoreham

"ST. VALENTINE HAD RHYTHM" . . . if he had not have had, they wouldn't celebrate his day with so many dances and parties. I can't suggest a more romantic spot to go "partying" than THE BLUE ROOM at THE SHOREHAM. Entrancing music, twinkling lights, clicking glasses, excellent cuisine and very special entertainment always means an evening of satisfaction and enjoyment at the SHOREHAM. Your old pal, Barnee, is there with his "swell-elegant" music—and as a special attraction—JOAQUIN GARCIA and his Mexican Continental Marimba Ensemble will play from 5 to 7 in the cocktail lounge and during interludes from 10 'til 1 in the Blue Room. This band is one of the most popular in the East and are foremost exponents of Rhumbas, Tangos and Sambas. For reservations phone ROBERT, ADAMS 0700.

Girl Reserves Survey Needs Before Serving

'Go and See' Plan, Urged by First Lady, Credited With Making 1938 an Outstanding Year in Accomplishment

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Community service based on first-hand knowledge of community needs has been one of the features stressed in the leadership training program of the Girl Reserves of the Washington Y. W. C. A. during the past year. A "go and see" plan such as that advocated by Mrs. Roosevelt in recent talks before women's organizations has been the foundation for all of the work the girls have done.

Miss Mabel R. Cook, Girl Reserve executive in charge of the department here for 12 years, considers 1938 outstanding in accomplishment. With a staff of three members—Miss Margaret Graves, assistant secretary; Mrs. Helen Middleton Smith, and Miss Mildred Chapin, half-time workers—it was decided leadership training for the officers of the 44 groups of Girl Reserves was the most effective way of reaching the 4,553 girls in the membership.

Each group has 11 officers and separate meetings were arranged for the 44 presidents, secretaries, social service chairmen and so forth, in which they were given special training for their duties.

The social service chairmen, for instance, made trips to various agencies where they interviewed the directors, found how the Girl Reserves could serve and planned their programs accordingly. "They learned the wisdom of finding out first how they could help instead of doing what was fun and then looking for someone who could use it," said Miss Cook.

They visited Children's Hospital to see the little patients and the type of soft, lightweight toys suitable for them. They were also shown three closets full of scrapbooks—more than can possibly be used. The result was that the Girl Reserves who made toys for Children's Hospital worked on the kind which were needed and did not add scrapbooks to the already crowded closets full of them.

The chairmen also went through the Self-Help Exchange and returned to explain its operation to their own groups. Several also arranged trips there for other students so they could see for themselves how it provided means for persons to help themselves. They likewise visited the Goodwill Industries, arranged for the distribution of Goodwill bags and to have the movies shown in their schools. They went to Neighborhood House and Friendship House where they learned toys were needed for the day nurseries and books for the libraries as well as jelly for the afternoon lunches for the children.

"Jelly rolls"—parties where the price of admission was a glass of jelly, were arranged to help solve the bread and jelly problem, and toys and books were contributed. All of the work was done from the standpoint of intelligent planning to meet a need, and the young leaders have learned the methods.

Every group of officers did something comparable to that of the social chairmen, says Miss Cook. The entertainment chairmen were divided into units and planned parties last summer for younger children attending Camp Stay-at-Home of the Y. W. C. A. After each party they met to discuss what arrangements might have been improved upon, gaining experience and ideas for planning their own Girl Reserve affairs.

The music chairmen, under Miss Mary Burnett, learned to lead group singing and others were given equally practical training.

The staff members have had the assistance of 121 volunteer workers who have given 4,648 hours of time in carrying out the program. Without this, they could not have done it, says Miss Cook. There are also 46 mothers serving on the Mothers' Council.

In addition to the 4,553 Girl Reserves, there are 422 boys enrolled in the activities program, participating regularly in dramatics and the dances of the Girl Reserve Department. Others attend as guests.

Hadassah Plans Second Term

The Hadassah Institute of Jewish Education planned by the chairman, Mrs. Samuel M. Dodek, has met with such success it will be conducted for the second semester, beginning tomorrow.

Monday afternoons at 2 o'clock it will be held at the Jewish Community Center. The following lecture courses are offered for the second semester: February 6, 13, 20 and 27, Mrs. Hyde G. Buller will speak on "The Novel as a Social Instrument in Contemporary Jewish Life;" March 6, Mrs. John Safer, on "The History of Zionism;" March 13, 20, 27 and April 3, Julius Towster, "The Psychological Approach to World Politics;" April 17, 24 and May 1, Rabbi Henry Segal, "East and West in Zionist Philosophy;" May 8 and 15, Dr. Louis L. Kaplan, of Baltimore, "The World's Enigma: A History of the Jews;" May 22, Mrs. Theodore Spector, "The History of Hebrew Music," and May 29, Rabbi Paul Richman, "The Need for Jewish Education."

Four seminar study groups are another innovation of the Hadassah Institute in its second semester. These will be studies in which the members will meet at the home of the group leader. Mrs. Theodore Spector will lead a group in "The History of Hebrew Music;" Mrs. Joseph Borus, "Jewish History Through Great Personalities;" Mrs. Samuel M. Dodek, "The Survival of the Jew in the World Today," and Mrs. Leopold V. Freudberg and Mrs. David Kushner, "Studies in Zionist Leadership."

Dr. Sells to Lead Shoppers' Series

Beginning tomorrow the League of Women Shoppers will sponsor the second series of four sessions on current labor problems. The fall sesions, attended by 50 league members during the month of November, studied the background and problems of the national labor relations act. This seminar will take up problems in labor legislation before Congress this term. The class will open with a study of the fair labor standards act and legislation which will be proposed to improve its administration. It is planned that later seminars will include discussions of legislation pertaining to the Senate committee on violations of free speech and rights of labor (La Follette Civil Liberties committee), national labor relations act amendments, social security and housing. These are the legislative fronts on which the National League of Women Shoppers will be active during this Congress.

Dr. Dorothy Sells, an authority on social legislation, will lead these discussions. When advisable she will invite technicians to contribute factual information. Dr. Sells is now on the research staff of Brookings Institution, completing her second volume on wage and hour regulation in Great Britain.

This series will begin tomorrow at 2:15 p. m. at the Friends' Meeting House, 2111 Florida avenue. To meet the request of the membership it has been planned to offer the same class tomorrow at 5 o'clock at the Arts Club, 2017 I street northwest.

Postpone Dedication

The dedication of the tree planted at the Masonic and Eastern Star Home in memory of Edith A. Williams, past grand matron of 1932, previously announced for this afternoon, has been postponed owing to the illness of Past Grand Patron Paul B. Cromelin. Notice of the new date of the dedication will be given later.

Mrs. Joseph Grigsby a Leader In Organization Work and Art

Active in Educational and Political Circles and a Patron of Sculpture And Painting Here and in Colorado

"Jack of all trades and master of none" is Mrs. Joseph Grigsby's estimate of the talents which have made her a leader in organization work here and in Colorado, her former home—but her friends take exception to the latter half of the old saying.

She came here from Denver, when Mr. Grigsby's business interests brought him to the Capital in the autumn of 1934. She then was a member of the board of regents of the University of Colorado, on which she had served for six years, elected by the State at large. During this period the first women's dormitory was built on the campus of the institution. In recognition of her services on the board of regents, she was made a member of the National Association of Deans of Women, to which she still belongs.

She also was active in the Colorado branch of the American Association of University Women and a member of its State board as chairman of legislation and chairman of education.

She is also a member of the Institute of World Affairs, and a year ago was the only woman among 52 speakers on the program of its Los Angeles convention.

After coming to Washington Mrs. Grigsby was, for a year and a half, director of the division of community organization in the National Youth Administration. She also served as national president of Delta Delta Delta Sorority from 1934 to 1938 and recently has been nominated for the office of secretary of the Woman's National Democratic Club here.

Before her marriage she taught art in the Denver schools and she has continued her interest in both sculpture and painting, in addition to her other activities. She and Mr. Grigsby have two children, Betty Jane and Robert, both students at Paul Junior High School, and they have also taken into their home another child, Bobby Kelly, aged 10, the orphaned son of close friends who had named them his guardians.

Mr. and Mrs. Grigsby came from the State of Colorado to reside at 5201 Colorado avenue here, but soon will move to an old house they are remodeling at Landover, Md. It was once the home of Maj. George Hamlet, where President McKinley spent many week-ends during his administration. Maj. Hamlet was the J. Edgar Hoover of his day.

The house stands opposite Beaver Dam Country Club and is being changed by the Grigsbys from old Victorian to Colonial style. The family will move into it in the early spring and Mrs. Grigsby, who has an interest in gardens as well as in making pictures of them, is looking forward to restoring those on the old place.

Just now Mrs. Grigsby is working as co-chairman, with Mrs. A. K. Anderson, of Alpha Omicron Pi, on arrangements for the convention of District 2 of the National Panhellenic Congress, to be held here February 24 to 26.

Mrs. Raleigh Gilchrist, Kappa Kappa Gamma, and Mrs. John Warlick, Zeta Tau Alpha, are other members of the committee. Miss Marguerite Winant, national president of Delta Gamma, will preside at all alumnae meetings of the congress while it is in session.

Mrs. Grigsby has announced that the delegates to the congress will be entertained by trips to Mount Vernon, sightseeing around Washington, a tea given by the Panhellenic Council at the George Washington University, a coffee at the University of Maryland, and a buffet supper.

Madame Chairman

SUSAN B. ANTHONY, grandniece of the great feminist leader whose name she bears, will speak at a luncheon commemorating the anniversaries of Miss Anthony and Anna Howard Shaw, to be given February 14 at the Y. W. C. A. by the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters. It will be sponsored by the department of government and the legal status of women of the league.

Casting some reflection on the effectiveness of Cupid's darts, the Valentine's Day topic will be "Uniform Marriage and Divorce Laws." Miss Anthony will discuss those of 1848 and the era of her great-aunt. Another speaker will be Mrs. Martha Gold, an attorney whose effort two years ago for more liberal divorce laws for the District of Columbia met with success.

The Chevy Chase branch of the National League of American Pen Women will hold its regular meeting at 3:30 p. m., Tuesday, with Mrs. Rutland Duckett Beard, 4708 Chevy Chase boulevard, D. C.

MRS. DANIEL S. COOMBS, corresponding secretary of Chapter H of the P. E. O., will preside Tuesday at its meeting at the home of Miss Helen Winter, in the Kenesaw Apartments—and thereby hangs a tale.

The president, Mrs. Rush B. Lincoln, wife of Col. Rush B. Lincoln, has left Washington to join her husband in San Diego, Calif., where he has recently been transferred to March Field. The vice president, Mrs. Sylvia Druehl, left Wednesday for San Francisco, Calif., to be gone until April.

At the meeting of the chapter on Jnauary 17, Mrs. Lincoln was presented with a silver vase by the members.

Another member of the chapter is also "on tour". She is Miss M. Isabel Allen of Kew Gardens, who, with her mother, recently left for a trip to South America.

Chapter H will elect new officers in March.

THE HOTEL GREETERS AUXILIARY has issued original announcements for its dance, to be held February 16, at the Shoreham. They tell their story in a jingle, illustrated with a couple dancing in a frame of gay notes, and the orchestra leader with raised baton, at the foot of the musical line.

Miss Lottie Taylor is honorary chairman; Mrs. Harry Stewart, general chairman of the committee, and other members are: Mrs. Sam Marcus, Mrs. Robert McClintic, Mrs. Elsie Kopel, president; Miss Bess Bauman, Miss Lewis Berry, Mrs. Cleo Spencer, Miss Edna Thompson and Mrs. F. P. Orliello.

Loyal Legion To Breakfast On Saturday

The Dames of the Loyal Legion will hold their twentieth annual breakfast Saturday at 12:30 in the Mayflower Hotel. The affair is given each year in honor of Lincoln's Birthday.

Representative Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois, and Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries will speak.

Barn Dance Given to Aid Symphony

Falls Church Society Dresses Part for Gay Saturday Night Party

PRECEDED BY SEVERAL dinner parties and attended by representatives of both the older and younger social groups in Falls Church, Va., the barn dance which was given in the Madison auditorium last evening to raise funds for the National Symphony Orchestra Association proved one of the gayest and most popular parties of the winter season. While all who attended did not heed the command to wear gingham and homespun, enough were attired in country costumes to lend a most rural and informal air to the gathering. The floor show included exhibition square dancing by Miss Mary Ann Bishop and Kendall Foss, of Washington. Hostesses for the evening were Mrs. Ward B. Freeman, Mrs. Robert Landreth, Mrs. Paul Peter, Mrs. Carl Haglund, Mrs. John L. Harrison and Mrs. T. Swann Harding.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. O. B. Livingston had 24 guests for luncheon preceding bridge, and Mrs. Marie Sisson Ingling hosted a luncheon at the home of Mrs. Lilliam Hicks.

Miss Mary Davenport yesterday entertained a group of her Falls Church friends at her home in The Ontario in Washington, preceded by a luncheon at Avignon Freres.

MRS. EDWARD F. CARLEY, of Wilmington, Del., who is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Palmer for 10 days has been much entertained this week. Tuesday night Mrs. Buford Bridwell had three tables of bridge in her honor; Wednesday Mrs. S. Parry Grubb gave a bridge luncheon for her; and Thursday Mrs. John Ball, of Dunn Loring, entertained at lunch and bridge in her honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Fenwick and their daughters, Mrs. J. Russell Browning and Miss Catherine Fenwick, have left by motor to spend three weeks at the Gulf Stream Hotel in Lake Worth, Fla. Mr. and Mrs. George Crossman and daughter, Mrs. O. E. Shaw, have gone to Miami, where Mrs. Crossman will remain until March. Her husband and daughter will come north again in two weeks.

Mrs. Wilbur S. Hinman, sr., was hostess at tea Friday afternoon, to tell her friends about her recent cruise to South America. With her husband and daughter, Mildred, of Washington, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Stewart, the Misses Bess and Clara Stewart and Bob Stewart, she was also a dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Styles and Miss Betty Styles. In Buenos Aires the Hinmans visited Henry Stewart, formerly of Falls Church.

MR. AND MRS. Stanley Bogess, of Washington, were dinner guests Wednesday of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Davis.

Bridge hostesses of the week include Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Harrington, Mrs. Egbert Stowers, Mrs. Charles Marshall, Miss Agnes Smith, Mrs. Dan Murphy, Mrs. Samuel Warner, Mrs. Noble Moore, Mrs. Howard Berger and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Lester with three tables Saturday evening.

Nordgren Work To Be Shown Here

An exhibition of the work of Oke Nordgren, one of six artists to represent the District in the National Art Exhibit in New York City, will be shown this month at the Woman's City Club, on Jackson place.

The club activities this week include a lecture Wednesday night before the business and professional section at its monthly dinner, by Miss Janet Richards, a life member of the organization. Miss Richards, internationally noted lecturer on current events, has spoken many times before the club, giving generously of her talents.

A new series of classes in public speaking and personality development will open Friday at 5 p. m., conducted by Sylvia Ziskind. Only members of the club may enroll.

Humbird-Schwarzenbach Marriage Wednesday Interests Cumberland

Society in Cumberland, Md., is much interested in the wedding of Miss Caroline Humbird, daughter of Mrs. Gretchen Humbird and the late J. Elder Humbird, and George A. Schwarzenbach, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Schwarzenbach, which will take place next Wednesday at 8 p. m., in Emmanuel Episcopal Church. The Rev. David Cartwright Clark, rector, will perform the ceremony.

The bride will have as her maid of honor her cousin, Miss Mary Baylor Reinhart, and the bridesmaids will be Mrs. W. Earle Cobey, Mrs. R. Arden Lowndes, Miss Margery Muncaster, Miss Ann Frances Whiting, Miss Barbara Louise Cowherd and Miss Betty Boyd. The bride will be given in marriage by her uncle, John L. Wellington.

John L. Schwarzenbach, Pittsburgh, will be his brother's best man and the ushers will be R. Carroll Hoke, Philadelphia, former State Senator J. Glenn Beall, Frostburg; Emil Schwarzenbach, R. Arden Lowndes, John C. Metz and Upshur Lowndes. A reception will follow at the Fort Cumberland Hotel.

Miss Humbird is a granddaughter of the late United States Senator George L. Wellington.

Miss Ann Frances Whiting entertained at dinner in her honor Wednesday. Among others who entertained were Miss Elsie Mae Poling with a cocktail party at the Fort Cumberland Hotel and Miss Betty Boyd with a luncheon.

Dr. and Mrs. James C. Cobey, Frostburg, will give a bridge supper February 11 in honor of Miss Jane DeShields, of Cumberland, formerly of Washington, who will become the bride of Wilbur M. Buchanan February 15, at Emmanuel Episcopal Church. A reception at the Fort Cumberland Hotel will follow the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Merz, Pittsburgh, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Mildred, to Francis P. O'Rourke, son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick F. O'Rourke, Mount Savage, Md., near Cumberland. The ceremony will be performed at St. Joseph's Church, Pittsburgh, Saturday, February 18.

Colorful and Exciting . . .

Two words that elegantly describe the Spring Hat Season!

Information regarding these fashions may be obtained by calling National 4200.

So fortunate is woman . . . for she shall inhabit a new spring hat. To lift her spirits and send them soaring! To utterly destroy her old winter personality and build a new one! Scintillating, unusual and as fresh as sixteen!

Whatever your mood, you can match it with a thrilling spring chapeau. There are some that will make you feel demurely sentimental, suavely sophisticated, or very seductive.

Straw . . . rough, smooth, open weaves, fine weaves, plain, or interwoven with gay colors . . . is the leading material. However, combinations, felt, antelope and novelty fabrics are very chic too, and destined to become popular.

Extravagant describes the manner in which designers have used veils. There's a profusion of them! Whooshs over the face, poufs on top, mists floating from turbans and toques, enticingly draped under the chin or streaming waist-long down the back. In fact, many hats have been fashioned entirely of veiling. Rolls upon layers to create a striking effect.

Color, too, plays an important role, in the new spring millinery. It is part of the magic that will make your quest for a hat a lark. As an accent there will be much matching of accessories with the hat, but there will be little matching of the costume as a whole.

In regard to your individual hat problem, we counsel you thusly: Find the hat that you know is suitable to your personality. If it's breezy or it's romantic, if you make up your mind it's you—don't let those despoilers of fair feminine headgear, your husband or beau, deter you one bit—WEAR IT!

Above—A pinwheel of two-tone veiling whirls atop this frivolously feminine black straw, and floats in a mist about the shoulders.

Left—A new version of the wimple, with bright colored jersey falling from the draped band. In pastel felt.

Left—For those who aspire to suave chic. A wine-red felt bravely caught in the center with the wine-red wing of a bird sweeping into pheasant tail feathers

Antelope, the color of deliciously browned toast, in a large brimmed sports hat that's slated for popularity.

Translucent flowers in a blended range of delicate spring shades sprout from the inside of this black straw.

Cruise Trunk Should Carry Costumes for Gales at Sea as Well as Dancing and Shore Trips

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Feb.4.

AT LAST I have traced our little autograph hounds of both sexes to their lair. They meet in Shubert Alley (between Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth streets) each evening just before theater time and regather in the same spot about 11:30 p. m. to compare notes and swap duplicate signatures.

ALICE HUGHES

I should choose Miss Queenie Markowitz, of the Bronx, 32 and chubby, as the queen of the lot. No star is safe from her book and stabbing pen. Miss Queenie has obtained no less than 20 autographs of the singing fellow, Mr. Harry Richman, the bulk being for trading purposes. The crowd I met in Shubert Alley numbered about 50 boys and girls of school age, some not too warmly dressed, either. Miss Queenie seemed the oldest of the lot, but very fast on the draw. After the theater four Harry Richman scrawls were getting one Zorina. The market on Richmans is bearish, but Zorina, evidently, is hard to get.

One little girl named Dorothy Raymond had spent all day and half the night chasing Sonja Henie—and finally got her. While I was talking to these juvenile hunters, several of them lit out after a cab holding Dick Powell, the movie man. But another child called Gertie told me how she had finally nabbed Robert Taylor after waiting at his hotel until 4:30 a. m.

That's what threw me! Why would any bare-headed little girl sit up until dawn to get the signature of a mere movie actor?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—A popular radio hour has now given birth to a new game. If it's like the rest, it is guaranteed, if persevered in, to drive a quiet home evening quietly goofy . . . Mrs. Maria Nelson, 80, relented and let her husband, Alfred, 60, out of jail. It seems she thought he had misappropriated $4,500 from their joint bank account, but he convinced her that he was going to invest it and make them both some money, so she decided to turn Alfred loose. She is a very determined old lady. As is usual with such people in the depths of our city, they live practically in poverty. Strange old city jetsam are not rare here, either . . . It took the drive against infantile paralysis here to bring "Robby" back into the spotlight. Shucks, you remember "Robby." Frances Robinson, secretary to Gen Hugh S. Johnson, and well known during his tenure as head of the late NRA. Well, "Robby" is still on the job—still a ball of fire, the general's good right arm, as well as his ears.

Eva Ortega, the singer in "Set to Music," the Noel Coward hit, is now patronizing some of the places where she used to warble for hire. I saw the Spanishy beauty a few nights ago at Le Coq Rouge (that's the name of a snooty boite, or bar) looking lovely in a Grecian gown of pleated chiffon, with a braided sash of bright green and blue. My gracious, sure must be wonderful to be singing the songs in a hit show!

Honest to John, there's a lifesized soap mannequin in a shop window here. She is modestly called "Ermyntrude, the Ivory girl," and Mr. Archie Parzini created her by art and main strength.

Wonder how San Francisco is getting along with our party-tossing author, Elsa Maxwell? It's her home town.

Now it is the typist's turn. The Fourth Annual Stenographers' Ball comes off here on the eleventh, and the queen of the shindig will be crowned by Billy Rose at his Casa Manana on the twenty-eighth. I don't like to doubt the good faith of a big party, but I'll always be afraid the "fix is in," when one queen is chosen from thousands of New York's key-bangers. An old skeptic, but can't help it.

Skin Requires Daily Care on Winter Cruises

Protectice Cream Found Necessary to Prevent Chapping, Irritation

By Carolyn Abbott.

MID-WINTER cruises play havoc with your complexion, unless you give your skin daily care. Sailing into a brisk, salty breeze after being shut in steam heated houses or offices, you will find that your skin has become tender, sensitive to change and will chap or burn easily.

The first few days on the ocean the weather is likely to be cold and blustery. And unless your skin is protected it will become rough, the make-up will smear and you will feel generally uncomfortable. To prevent chapping and irritation, apply a good lubricating, protective cream. There is a special cold weather, polar cream that keeps the skin soft and smooth in windy, zero atmosphere. This may be smoothed on over your usual make-up or be used as a base.

Should Change Cream

As soon as you reach warm waters, change this cream to one with a more oily base. Keep a foundation cream on to prevent sun wrinkles, and squint lines. And if you are determined to get a sun tan, remove all your make-up except lipstick and apply a good sun tan lotion or oil. The oil eliminates burning, or blistering and helps you to brown smoothly. Take your sunbathing by degrees, for the skin is unaccustomed to the hot rays of the sun. Rub the oil on the shoulders, neck, arms and legs, otherwise you will tan unevenly. Besides looking like a spotted toad on the trip, you will find when you return to the city and the splotched tan begins to fade that you will look more like a half baked lobster than a beautiful, golden glow girl.

When the skin begins to darken from daily exposure, you should change your powder to a darker shade. Lip stick and rouge should be at least one shade darker, for the color tones of the skin will change from the light bluish undertones to the pinker or brownish undertone.

In addition to the protective foundation creams and tanning oil, your beauty kit should be equipped with a good cleansing cream, a night cream that supplies natural oil to the skin, a manicure set, complete with nail file, clippers, scissors, emery board, polish remover, cuticle oil and polish.

Must Protect Hair

Protect your hair from too much sun exposure, if you want to prevent it from becoming brittle and dry. While on deck or on shore during the hottest part of the day, wear a hat or bright colored kerchief on the head.

Keep your coiffure fairly simple while on the cruise. It takes a lot of time to visit the ship beauty parlor each day in order to keep an elaborate hair-do looking presentable. A short bob will be much easier to keep than the shoulder length. Salty air takes the curl out of your hair, so if your curls are loose get a new permanent wave before you start on the voyage.

Contemplating a cruise? If so, now is the time to stock your sea trunk with sturdy costumes that will see you through a lusty gale, and through sight-seeing trips on shore, swimming, tennis, dining and dancing aboard. The wardrobe need not be elaborate, but it must be appropriate—that means casualness for day time and glamour for evening. Chiffons, crisp nets, colorful cotton and rayon fabrics are ideal materials for evening frocks for they require very little packing space. Noncrushable, wrinkle proof, the sports outfits shown above are smart for day time wear.

Upper left—A fitted, cardigan terry cloth jacket in royal, black or white is designed to wear over swim suits or shorts.

Upper right—A tailored rayon dress in a bright scroll design. Buttoning smoothly up the front, the skirt has just enough flare to permit ease of movement.

Lower left—A versatile play outfit in denim for deck games. It consists of pleated shorts, a handsome leather belt and a circular skirt that zips up neatly or can be thrown about the shoulders as a cape.

Lower right—A smart two-piece dress of mumere tweed. This type of dress is excellent for shore excursions and to wear the first day on ship.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Disillusioned in First Great Love, Girl Has No Interest in Men; Will She Ever Feel Again?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I wonder if a person ever really gets over a true love? I went steady with a boy for a year and loved him very much. He said I was everything he admired in a girl and that he wanted to marry me, but there were (and are) many obstacles in his path. Then, suddenly, he stopped calling. I had no idea why, and naturally I couldn't put a direct question, so my thoughts just went in circles.

After three sad, lonely, heartbreaking months he came to call and asked for a date that night. But I was busy. This happened again, twice in succession, with the same results. He had started going with another girl in the meantime, and seemed to think as much of her as he once had of me. I think he felt sorry for the way he had treated me and thought he could help along a little, by being friendly.

Once in a while he calls and asks my opinions on different things, and today we are friends, nothing more. After he had broken away so abruptly in the first place, I started immediately going out with others, so that I wouldn't fall into despair. That's why I was busy when he asked for dates. All this is by way of explanation. Here is what's worrying me: I can't seem to get seriously interested in any other person, since I recovered from my love for him. It is actually true that I no longer love him. I have no feeling toward him at all. I am not even angry. Life is too short to waste it in anger at anyone, for any length of time.

I am only 21, which is quite young, I suppose, to wonder if my future is to be traveled alone; but really I do worry about the way I feel. I just don't feel interested in the opposite sex except as friends and as escorts for an evening. I've loved before this last love and that's why I wonder about myself now. I believe I'd much rather be in love, even unhappily, than have this calm, empty, serene feeling.

I'm not searching for a husband and I don't look on marriage as a state to be achieved so that one can sit back, relax and let the world go by. I'm just wondering if my feelings are dead, or if they are just vacationing for a while. I've never felt this way before—so apart from things. I always have a good time at parties and most all social affairs. It's only after I am alone at home that I feel let down. I am often complimented on my appearance and try to be pleasant and attractive. What do you think of it all? Sincerely, HENRIETTA.

Lull in Storm

DEAR HENRIETTA: There is nothing particularly significant or portentous about the present becalmed state of your emotions. After the storm, there is always the lull—for which the storm-tossed wayfarer should be duly grateful. I think you may have been rather severely shocked and bruised by the once deeply loved young man's defection or treachery—whichever you choose to call it—to the extent that you may not ever again yield your heart quite so fully and freely on first invitation. Yet this does not mean that you won't love again; and all the more deeply and perhaps all the more wisely, as a result of this first heartbreaking, disillusioning experience.

Don't make the mistake of supposing that romantic disillusionment is necessarily a devastating experience; that it strips the sufferer of all that makes for happiness, and leaves him a beggar facing an empty future. It can be, and should be accepted as, an educational experience, teaching the difference between the true and the false, in human beings as well as in human emotions. After all, what is "illusion," which first we must possess before we can be disillusioned?

My dictionary defines illusion as "unreal or misleading image; false impression; misconception; perception which fails to give the true character of an object perceived." Freely translated, it is a rose-colored cloud of beautiful untried theory and poetical fancy, existing in the mind of youth, which gets between him and the manifold aspects of life with which he is coming to grips for the first time; which camouflages them out of all semblance to basic reality, causes him to suppose they are other than they are, and to expect quite different things from them than he is likely to receive.

Thus defined, don't you think it is a rather good thing to have done with? Once the mists of illusion have been swept away by some painfully instructive experience, the person is better implemented than before to engage with profit in the business of living. upposing that experience has had to do with an affair of the heart—as in your case—the person may withdraw a little in spirit, for a time, from the opposite sex. But that is merely a reflex, instinctively self-protective sort of reaction. Nature itself is aiding him to get his bearings, his second wind, a truer perspective born of digested experience, before spurring him into action again.

That "let-down" feeling which overtakes you at the end of a pleasant evening, when you find yourself alone, is almost universally shared by persons newly out-of-love. It means, simply, that you are sensing the difference between being vitally linked to another's life, and being largely on the outside of other lives. And if you "don't feel interested in the opposite sex except as friends and as escorts," it is only because you have not as yet met the man who has "what it takes" (as we say in the vernacular), to set your heart palpitating all over again.

From now on you're bound to be a bit more discerning, a trifle warier and more self-contained; holding yourself more aloof, and the rank-and-file of men more at arm's length, so that the next love—when it comes—will have to be something more nearly approximating "the real thing," if it is to get under your guard. And that is all to the good; just as it should be. You have nothing to worry about in the meantime, and I advise you to relax and enjoy that "calm, empty, serene feeling," while it lasts. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Recipe Contest Takes as Theme Bought Puddings

Have you ever discovered some ingenious and non-detectable method of dressing up a packaged pudding so that it tastes absolutely oven-fresh? Or have you recently stumbled upon a clever fruit or chocolate-nut sauce that so disguises the taste of an inexpensive bought pudding that your guests exclaim, "How do you ever get time to bake such delicious desserts?" If you are one of those fortunates who can whip up epicurean sweets from a 5-cent dessert package, enter a recipe for your formula at once. The new Post recipe contest has as its theme—"Tricks With Packaged Puddings."

Mrs. Margaret Belair, 118 South Fairfax street, Alexandria, Va., has requested that recipe competition be centered around unusual methods of making the packaged pudding tantalizing. Have you a saucy fig, jam or cherry coverlet for a bought cornstarch pudding? Or a trick of tossing marshmallaws or nut meats into a chocolate pudding? If so, mail a kitchen-tested, carefully written recipe at once to Alice Clayton, The Post Food Editor. Contest closing date is February 11. Cash awards include first prize, $3.00, a second prize of $2.00, and three additional prizes of $1.00.

Private Work Here Triples January, 1938

Value Is $3,572,461, Gain of $2,452,901; December Bettered

Heralding what is believed the beginning of another year of great building activity, a January report on private construction and repairs in the District of Columbia, made public yesterday by District Building Inspector John W. Oehmann, discloses a total valuation for such work amounting to $3,572,461. The January, 1939, figure reflects a gain of $2,452,901 over the total for the month a year ago and a $1,434,121 advance from the volume of December, 1938.

Of last month's valuation, the sum of $3,136,150 represents new building in Washington, and $436,311 alteration, modernization and repair of private property. Valuation of new construction in the different sections last month was: Northeast, $218,400; Southeast, $406,300; Northwest, $2,511,550; Southwest, none. Value of repairs by section was: Northeast, $18,900; Southeast, $12,130; Northwest, $398,631; Southwest, $6,650.

In the past month, Inspector Oehmann's office issued permits for erection of 184 single-family dwellings, costing $1,133,650, and 14 apartment buildings accommodating 130 families and representing an expenditure of $392,000. Of the dwellings for which permits were written last last month, 34 were of row, 98 detached, 22 semi-detached, and 30 community type. Permits were granted for construction of 210 brick and no frame structures during January. Four brick and nine frame buildings were razed during the month.

In January, 1939, the office also issued permits for $901,188 worth of municipal work, including a court building costing $450,000, a reservoir valued at $350,000 and two repair projects amounting to $101,188. During the past week, permits were approved for the following:

The Doctors' Hospital, Inc., ten-story and basement reinforced concrete hospital at 1815 I street northwest, cost, $800,000; Lee Paschall, Richmond, Va., builder; Francisco & Jacobus, New York, architects.

District of Columbia Government, seven-story, brick, steel and concrete ward building and one-story brick, steel and concrete heating plant at Gallinger Hospital, Nineteenth and C streets southeast.

District of Columbia Government, three-story, basement and attic, limestone faced court and office building at 400 E street northwest, cost, $450,000.

St. Martin's Church, one-story brick and concrete church building at 1902 North Capitol street, cost, $95,000; Davis, Wick, Rosengarten Co., Inc., builder; F. V. Murphy architect.

Philip Milstone, installation of new elevator and improvements to property at 937 D street northwest, cost, $72,000; G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Israel Reiskin, three-story brick and cinder block apartment building at 551-557 Lebaum street southeast, cost $40,000; G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Mary L. Hall, seven two-story brick and cinder block dwellings at 414-426 Nineteenth street northeast, cost, $35,000; Louis H. Hall, builder; G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Howard Homes, Inc., eight two-story brick dwellings at 47-61 Franklin street northeast, cost, $32,000; Clarence W. Gosnell, Inc., builder; John D. Cobb, architect.

Eugene H. Phifer, four two-story brick and cinder block apartment buildings at 4000-4012 Edmunds street northwest, cost, $30,000; Dana B. Johannes, jr., designer.

Elite Laundry Co., three-story brick and concrete rug cleaning building in the rear of 2117 Fourteenth street northwest, cost, $30,000; Skinker & Garrett, builders; James F. Grant, architect.

Washington American League Ball Club, two-story brick and concrete toilet addition at 2015 Georgia avenue northwest, cost, $28,000; George A. Fuller Co., builder; N. W. Barrett, designer.

Federal Service Finance Corporation, additional story on existing office building at 718 Jackson place northwest, cost, $18,350; E. Burton Corning, architect; Warren Spencer, Inc., contractor.

Carl Iver Johnson, three two-story brick and cinder block dwellings at 5501, 5435 and 5431 Broad Branch road northwest, cost, $18,000.

Woodward & Lothrop, erection of cooling tower on roof of building at Tenth and G streets northwest, cost, $17,000; the Marley Co., Kansas City, Kans., designer; Mehring & Hanson Co., contractor.

Clyde L. Fowler, two-story brick veneer dwelling at 1506 Otis street northeast, cost, $4,500.

Pichler-Richmond Construction Co., two 2½-story brick and concrete block dwellings at 3907 and 3909 Northampton street northwest, cost, $11,000; William Crusemire, designer.

Week's News in the Real Estate Field

By Thomas M. Cahill

Amazing growth of residential construction in the local metropolitan area was reviewed last Thursday at a luncheon meeting of the home builders group, Washington Real Estate Board at Raleigh Hotel. Statistics from the board submitted at the meeting over which W. O. Cooley, group chairman, presided, showed that during the past four years, 17,787 one-family dwellings were erected in the District, Arlington, Va., and Montgomery County, Md. In the same period, 15,579 units in multi-family structures were also provided for the area.

President Melvin C. Hazen, District Board of Commissioners, addressing the assembly, said private real estate was carrying a larger proportion of the tax load than it should and that Federal holdings locally, if assessed on the same basis, would produce approximately $12,000,000 annually in tax revenue. Other speakers were Real Estate Commissioner Harold E. Doyle, President Francis A. Murray, of the real estate board; Lewis T. Breuninger, A. S. Gardiner, sr., Morris Cafritz, H. L. Rust, jr., William J. Flather, jr., Edward R. Carr, James McD. Shea, Arthur C. Houghton and William C. Miller.

Reports from the ticket committee for the sixth annual dinner-dance of Washington Real Estate Board at the Mayflower Hotel, February 21, indicate that sale of tickets will be closed much sooner than originally planned. Approximately 350 of the accommodations for 500 persons have been reserved.

Milton F. Schwab, chairman of the committee, has assisting him the following: F. Latimer Barkley, J. McKenney Berry, jr., Grant Boss, Edward H. Brent, Richard J. Carr, Paul D. Crandall, E. Spencer Fitzgerald, James Franklin, W. M. Gardiner, L. T. Gravatte, jr., Charles S. Gunn, H. Ray Heacock, Arlie Johnson, F. Moran McConihe, Robert F. Lammond, F. E. Middleton, jr., A. Jasper Moore, Henry W. Morgan, jr., Frank Paroni, J. G. Pascoe, H. M. Ritterbush, Thomas W. Sandoz, William Schwartz and Horace W. Talley.

Every effort is being made by the committee in charge to make this affair surpass similar parties held in the past under the sponsorship of the board. Heading the committee is J. Hawley Smith with the following members assisting: J. Lee Donnelly, Richard D. Stimson, S. S. Spruce, Thornton W. Owen, Charles L. Norris, J. C. Weedon, jr. and H. C. Cryer.

F. Eliot Middleton, a past president of Washington Real Estate Board, has concluded a Florida vacation.

Manager John F. Webster of the Northern Virginia office of Boss & Phelps, is at his desk after recovery from illness.

Harvey A. Lee has been appointed to take charge of the property management department of Frank S. Phillips' office. Mr. Lee was educated in Detroit, Mich., and has been actively identified with the building industry in that city and in Cleveland, Ohio, since 1923. He was also associated with the Potomac Electric Power Co.

The February luncheon meeting of Washington building congress will be held tomorrow afternoon, at 12:30 o'clock, at Lafayette Hotel. Dr. Wilson Compton, secretary and manager of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, will talk on "Small Homes Needs and Opportunities." Every member of the congress, regardless of his business connections, will be vitally interested in what Dr. Compton has to say, it is announced. His organization has made some interesting experimentation in low-cost construction in its series of demonstration houses built just outside of Washington.

The office of Rufus S. Lusk, secretary of the Building Owners and Managers Association, at 1508 H street northwest, is being enlarged.

Robert P. Scott is now associated with the office of Edward R. Carr and the Barnaby Woods Development Co.

Liberalization Steps Up FHA Activity

2,552 Applications in 1st 12 Months; January 278% Over 1938

In the year following liberalization of the national housing act, in February, 1938, applications for insurance of mortgage loans on 2,552 new small homes have been received by the District of Columbia insuring office of that agency, Henry H. Dearing, director of the local office, announces.

Applications received during the 12 months aggregated 3,530 for a total of $20,127,800. Mr. Dearing attributed the activity of his office to the more elastic provisions for financing homes, included in the national housing act by the amendments.

"During the 12 months prior to the first anniversary of the passage of the amendments, our volume of mortgage insurance applications showed a marked upturn. Significant is the fact that 72 per cent of all applications received involved new home construction projects.

"Also, the contrast between January, 1938, and January, 1939, is another indication of the growing popularity of the insured mortgage system. In January, 1938, we received 66 applications for mortgage insurance, involving loans totaling $402,000. In January, 1939, the figures were 249 applications covering $1,402,700 of mortgages.

"Thus, exactly one year after the new amendments went into affect figures for January showed an increase this year of 278 per cent in number and 248 per cent in dollar volume."

Throughout the Nation during the same period, FHA reports 100,000 individual homes have been built or started, all of them approved before construction. At the present time FHA is handling about three times the business it was transacting a year ago. During January, throughout the country, construction was started on dwelling accommodations for more than 10,000 families, financed with FHA-insured mortgages.

Dungian, Inc., to Build

D. J. Dunigan, Inc., will build seven two-story brick dwellings at 5118-5130 North Capitol street, at an estimated cost of $35,000. G. T. Santmyers is the architect.

To Erect 9 Homes

Jacob Roberts plans construction of nine two-story brick dwellings at 5103-5117 Fourth street northwest and 341 Gallatin street northwest. Plans are prepared by G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Rising Wages Boosting Home Building Costs

Buyers Getting Better Values, Though, Survey Of 18 Cities Shows

Minneapolis, Minn.—The cost of building a modest home is advancing at a rate of about $10 per month. A home which cost $4,000 to build at 1937 average wage rates and materials prices in 18 United States cities cost $4,013 to build in January, 1938, $4,116 if built in September, 1938, and $4,111 at January, 1939, cost levels. This is an increase of almost 4 per cent from 1937 averages and of 3½ per cent since January, 1938, according to an analysis by Northwestern National Life Insurance Co.

Home building costs are now within 1½ per cent of 1926-29 boom-time levels, the study shows; the average hourly rates for skilled building labor are 7½ per cent higher than the 1926-29 average rates, and common labor hourly wage rates in January, 1939, were 24 per cent higher than in the 1926-29 period. Yet the home buyer is getting more for his money than ever begfore, the report states, due to a combination of improved methods, higher standards, new inventions, and lower financing costs.

In July, 1938, residential building volume forged ahead of the corresponding month of 1937 for the first time; each month since then has been ahead of the corresponding month of the previous year, with the last half of 1938 showing a 50 per cent increase in dollar volume over the corresponding half of 1937. January activity indicated a continuation of the pace, with a residential building volume of well over the billion dollars forecast for 1939. At the same time, residential foreclosures ran approximately 25 per cent less in 1938 than in 1937, the report points out.

In seven out of the 18 cities covered by the report, current home building costs are above their 1926-29 levels. The seven cities are Pittsburgh, Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Denver, Seattle, and San Francisco. In two more cities, Atlanta and Cleveland, current home building costs are very close to the 1926-29 levels. The average hourly wage rate paid common labor in January, 1939, was 68 cents an hour, compared with an average of 55 cents in the 1926-29 period.

The average hourly rate paid skilled labor in the building field in January was $1.43, compared with $1.33 in the 1926-29 period. The rise in the wage rates paid common labor has almost eliminated the unskilled workman from the home building field in many localities; apprentice classes of skilled workmen are now used in operations formerly handled by common labor, at little higher hourly cost and with better productivity and quality of workmanship.

Figures submitted by Minneapolis building contractors on a five-room house to be sold for $5,000, and costing $4,700 for labor and materials, show a labor cost of $2,200, or 47 per cent, and a materials cost of $2,500, or 53 per cent. The old rule-of-thumb in the late '20's was 40 per cent for labor and 60 per cent for materials.

Higher wage rates, increased costs due to higher building standards, and social security and other tax additions are offset in a number of ways in modern home construction, the study shows. Operations are considerably more mechanized than in the late '20's. There is little hand sawing. This is almost all done by machinery at high speed.

Freight rates on some materials are reduced: Mill work, for example, is largely milled where the trees are cut, instead of the unfinished lumber being shipped to various local points and milled there. Heating plant parts come so accurately fitted that much less time is required for installation than formerly. In general today builders' profits are very narrow, and at times are at the vanishing point. Finally, present day financing costs are much lower than in the late '20's.

Net results to the home buyer of today are: A tightly insulated house—insulation was the exception rather than the rule a decade or so ago; an automatic heating system, with winter air-conditioning, for little or nothing more than the old-fashioned "shovel swinging" plant; 30-year guaranteed roof instead of a 20 or 25 year job; safety wiring in metal conduits, which costs the builder ten times as much as the old open wiring; a slightly smaller cubical content than the same money would buy in the late '20's, but actually greater usable living space and a considerably more spacious appearance, due to better planning and arrangement, and infinitely greater beauty and variety of design. Finally, purchase terms are far more liberal and interest rates far lower than ever before.

Thus the home buyer today gets considerably more for his dollar, while labor gets a larger share of that dollar, the report sums up. It again offers this reminder, however—the cost of building even a modest home is advancing at approximately $10 per month.

Home Loans Total $797,996,000 in 1938

A total of $797,996,000 was borrowed from savings, building and loan associations in 1938, the United States Building and Loan League reports, making the year just past the second largest since before the depression. December loans by the associations surpassed that month in 1937 by 6.3 per cent, the first time during 1938 that a month had shown more activity than its parallel month of the preceding year.

Loans which provided people with money to build new houses, a conspicuous feature of the savings and loan activity during the latter months of 1938, mounted higher in December than they had been in November by 2 per cent and they were a fourth greater than December a year ago.

New Lavatory Has Unusual Features

A new lavatory, while only 13 inches square, has many features usually associated only with larger fixtures, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau. The new lavatory has a spacious 3-inch shelf providing ample space for toilet articles, a handsome chromium plated mixing type fitting, and faucets with renewable seats and comfortable handles.

Solid Colors Popular

Walls painted in solid colors are used in the most recent plans for home decoration.

Grouped Plumbing Saves

For economy in building, all the plumbing in the house should be grouped together if possible.

New Window Treatments Show Daring Effects

In a recent exhibit of fall furnishings, the displays of complete window treatments combining draperies, curtains and colorfully painted Venetian blinds, attracted a great amount of comment and attention throughout the show. Daring departures from precedents in color and style characterized the displays with such combinations as marine blue and lemon yellow; turquoise and cherry red attaining prominence and favor.

Frigidaire Dealers to Meet Here

450 to Attend Area Sales Convention On Friday

More than 450 major electrical appliance dealers and executives of department and furniture stores and public utilities in Balitmore, Washington, Hagerstown and surrounding territory will attend a sales convention here February 10, under supervision of officials of Frigidaire Division, General Motors Sales Corporation, who are coming from Dayton, Ohio, it is announced by H. L. Harbison local branch manager.

This meeting will be held in the Mayflower Hotel, where the 1939 line of new Frigidaire refrigerators, electric ranges, electric water heaters and commercial refrigeration equipment will be displayed for the first time to the Frigidaire sales organization in this area.

Company plans for the coming spring and summer sales campaigns will be given by a group of approximately 13 Frigidaire representatives from the Dayton plant, who have been working since November on the program to be presented.

Mr. Harbison will preside as chairman of the convention.

Splash Blocks Urged

Do not let downspouts or leaders empty directly on the ground; provide splash blocks at least 3 feet long under the spouts to carry the water away from the house.

Dahlia Futurity Medal to Be Offered Again

Capital Is Given First Place in Last Year's Shows by Official

By Katherine B. Pozer.

At the last meeting of the National Capital Dahlia Society, John L. Bishop, chairman for awards, announced that the House Beautiful Dahlia Futurity gold medal again would be among awards at this year's shows. The medal is awarded only at outstanding shows, regional in character.

In announcing the list of dahlias which will be included in this year's Futurity, J. W. Johnson, who makes the selection, gave Washington first place in last year's shows "due to the well planned layout." In its two years the Washington show has risen to this high place, and the show for the coming year promises to be of even better character. Frank L. Goetzger, chairman for the show the last two years, again will head the general committee.

The House Beautiful Futurity, comprises a class of the newest varieties. The entries, which must be of dahlias from the Futurity list consist of six blossoms, which may be of a simple variety or each bloom a different variety.

Local growers will have the opportunity of entering three Futurity competitions, as both the Woodridge Garden Club and the Takoma Horticultural Society have a Futurity with a silver medal award and the Baltimore Dahlia Show has a gold medal. The Baltimore Show was said by Johnson to have been the strongest in the country "competitively" last year.

The four classifications in the Futurity are: first exhibition; second those with futures as cut flowers and for garden adornment, not necessarily large but good growers and bloomers and beautiful in appearance; third pom-poms, miniatures and singles and, fourth, foreign varieties.

In class two are Louis Walcher, Marietta, Miss Santa Monica, Hillside Gold, Red Letter Day, Apple Blossom, Ohio Rose and Margie Parreda; class 3, Julia S., Baby Snooks, Dianne Roseanne, Cynthia, Betty Malone, Little Prince, Snow White, Thrill, Doc and Pink Lass; the foreign varieties, Mrs. B. Amber from Australia, The Bride, Magel's Giant, Kimi Kage, Sir Arthur, from England, Don Sowton, Petit Sonne, Little Darling and Reginald.

The variety Sleepy Hollow, winner of last year's Futurity, received the largest number of points at the 26 shows which gave Futurity awards. It is a giant, incurved pink and white introduced by D. T. Morgan, jr. This variety was winner at the National Capital show, and visitors to the show will remember the six blooms of this beautiful flower which gave the award to Mr. Goetzger.

Second place last year was a tie between the dahlia, Carl Dahl, of the Hillcrest Gardens, and a variety from Australia, the Freda George. Third went to Monarch of the East, from Almy's Dahlia Gardens, and the Julian C. Bunge, from the Mad River Gardens, took fourth place. The latter had the distinction of being shown in more classes than any other variety.

Varieties in this year's lists which had interesting records at last year's shows include the Mayor Frank Otis, an informal with soft, golden-yellow and coppery shading, with good keeping qualities. This variety won six awards at the Alameda Dahlia Show and two at the California Dahlia Show, and was also a winner at Portland. It was given the silver medal of the American Dahlia Show in New York. Everybody's Favorite, a rose-pink, giant informal, decorative, was winner of the highest award at the Midwest Show at Detroit, and Glamour won the achievement medal at the Baltimore Show.

Information and advice on the newest dahlias may be had from the National Capital Dahlia Society. With its large orders from members, the purchasing committee obtains special rates on dahlias from many of the best growers in the country. The performance of the newest varieties is important to prospective purchasers, and many members of the society, through their own experiences, are qualified to give valuable information. The newest dahlias are discussed informally at monthly meetings of the dahlia society. Information about the society or its meetings may be had from the president, Dr. C. C. Clark.

Alexandria

Mrs. Atherton Macondray will be hostess at a meeting of the Garden Club of Alexandria Tuesday afternoon. Morley J. Williams will discuss the gardens at Mount Vernon.

Woodridge

The annual dinner of the Woodridge Garden Club will be held tomorrow evening at Sherwood Hall, Twenty-second street and Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Radio Garden Club

Two interesting programs will be given over Radio Station WOR this week, sponsored by the Radio Garden Club. At 1:15 p. m. tomorrow Robert E. Tapperson, seedman, will discuss "Something Old, Something New," and Friday afternoon at the same hour H. H. Hess will discuss "Watering the Garden."

National Flower and Garden Show

Opening next Sunday and lasting through the week, the Flower and Garden Show of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists will be held at Houston, Tex., at the Sam Houston Coliseum.

Natchez and Southern Shows

The Pilgrimage Garden Club of Natchez again will open 20 of that city's historic homes to the public March 4 to 19. The tour, as in the last eight years, will take two days, and is divided into four sections, a morning and afternoon being devoted to each. In the evenings there will be Confederate Balls and the singing of spirituals, and other interesting events to make a visitor's stay full of interest and to give a picture of the interesting past of Natchez.

The New Orleans Fiesta will be held March 12 to 19, and the gardens at Bellingrath will be in full bloom at the same time, as will the famed Azalea Trail of Mobile.

Design Brick Dwellings

Kirkhuff & Bagley are designers of nine two-story brick dwellings which Brown Bros. Corporation will construct at 3611-3615 Ingomar place northwest, 5234-5238 and 5244-5248 Nebraska avenue northwest. Estimated cost of the dwellings is $8,000 each.

Waverly Taylor Building

Waverly Taylor, Inc., continues its Dumbarton operation with application for permits to build four more two-story brick houses in that development. They will be located at 4632, 4636, 4640 and 4644 Reservoir road northwest and their estimated cost is $50,850. Taylor & Drayer are the architects.

Food Exposition To Open Feb. 13

Featuring an attractive entertainment program, the Eighth Annual United Food Store Exposition will be held February 13 to 18, inclusive, in the Packard Building, Twenty-fourth street northwest, north of M. All space for the show has been sold and 50 exhibitors are assured it was announced by exposition directors. The first session will get underway at 8 p. m., February 13, and programs have been arranged for each afternoon and night of the week through Saturday.

Honor guests for opening night will be Alvin Hall, director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; Judge Robert E. Mattingly and Isaac Gans, A. B. C. Board member. Meyer Sody, president of United Food Stores, heads the exposition committee. Other members are Morris Engel, vice president; David Abraham, treasurer; Samuel Goldstein, manager, and David Hornstein, general counsel.

Duborg Offers Studio Type Living Room

Post Display Home Is Being Shown In Aurora Hills

Living rooms of the studio type are proving popular with home buyers, and numerous developers who have provided these innovations in floor planning have met with a gratifying response from purchasers. The studio arrangement is a pleasing departure from the older and more formal styling of this important section of the home and the touch of unconventionality adds to its attractiveness.

This form of planning has been applied to the living room of the Washington Post Display Home now being shown at Twenty-sixth street south, in Aurora Hills, Va. The exhibit dwelling has been modeled along lines of the quaint and pretty manor house of Sweden. Characteristic of the family meeting place in Swedish homes, this room has been given ample space and light through generous dimensions and two large bay windows. A large corner fireplace with broad, elevated hearth completes the Scandinavian motif in the building of the room.

Built by Duborg Construction Co. and presented by the Duborg-Hallook Agency, Inc., this dwelling contains a large entrance hall, bright dining room, modern kitchen, screened living porch and bedroom with complete bath on the first floor. Upstairs are three wide and comfortable bedrooms a tiled bath and five commodious closets. A recreation room with service bar, maid's room, bath and two-car garage are in the substructure.

Located in a delightful wooded section, only three blocks away form a business and shopping section and close to the Army-Navy Country Club, this air-conditioned display house may be inspected by crossing Memorial Bridge to Arlington Ridge road, then south, or left, two miles to Twenty-third street, and left one block.

Shrubs Screen Porch; End Goldfish Feeling

The old idea of the front porch open to the street so that our outdoor life was visible to all who passed is disappearing. If you still have the front porch and want to keep it, plant a hedge of some quick-growing shrub and put gate posts and a gate at the entrance to the path. In a short time, when the hedge grows up, you will lose that goldfish feeling.

The Week in Real Estate

National Association of Real Estate Boards, was a visitor here last week on his way back from Dallas, Tex., where he relinquished his executive duties to E. L. Ostendorf, Cleveland, new president, at the annual meeting of organization.

Harry Grant Atkinson, Chicago, director of activities of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, will arrive here this week to prepare for the national conference on property management to be held at Wardman Park Hotel, February 13-16.

Announcement was made last week that Walker & Dunlop, Inc., has been named an approved mortgage for the Federal Housing Administration.

New Furniture Orders Exceed $35,000,000

Buyers at International Home Furnishings Show Expect Sales Boom

By Lynn Wood.

Chicago.—New furniture presentations at the International Homefurnishings Market here reflected the "tempo of the times" in that no drastic departure from previous furniture trends was seen. Furniture displays showed two parallel developments—a furtherance of the American modern show during the last two years and a continuance of the traditional furniture for the more conservative buyer.

Although the modern furniture at the show has not been radically changed, it continues to feature a softening of lines for the more gracious living which is a keynote of today's home furnishings. Warmer finishes, too, are being shown—radically departing from the harsh bleaches which marked the renaissance of "modern" furniture two years ago. Darker than the suntans and suntones of the last market are the new finishes which have eliminated even the "orange" cast, and have become mellowed to a light cocoa shade.

In contrast, period furniture was seen not only in the approved dark mahogany, but in even greater numbers of light finishes than have been recently shown. The amber shades vie with the dark mahogany for interest in traditional furniture, in so doing retaining the lines of the ancient masters, yet adding a modern touch in the new finishes.

The "ensemble" idea in home furnishings is stronger than ever, with living room, dining room and bedroom furniture correlated for the American woman who is becoming increasingly style conscious and wishes to have her room in perfect harmony, but who is unable to have an interior decorator. Many exhibitors showed complete rooms and series of rooms to be sold as ensembles with colors matched and details worked out to present a well-styled room or house.

There is a tendency to subdue color and further simplify lines. Color was of prime importance at the show, with greater emphasis placed on the "off" colors. Mauve shades, with a decided purplish cast, vied with blue-greens for importance. Deep burgundies, deep blues, a rose that is almost a rust, and interesting off-whites were important.

Topping all previous highs for attendance and buying, the Homefurnishings Market chalked up a record registration of 10,383 buyers as jubilant exhibitors tallied orders whose value was estimated to exceed $35,000,000. Volume of sales for the total market, was 42 per cent greater than in January, 1938.

Buying in the market was of a character to indicate a sound and important business comeback in the homefurnishings field. Throughout the Nation there is a genuine consumer demand for homefurnishings, marking the close, this year, of a ten-year cycle since the Nation's homes were last refurnished in the boom days of 1929. Consequently retailers atending the markets bought as they have never bought in ten years to rebuild stocks.

Further optimism is founded on the immediate prospect of new millions to be spent by the consumer for the outfitting of newly built homes which is seen in the gathering force of the current upswing in home construction over the country. National figures show residential building to be up 60 per cent over a year ago, with construction running over $100,000,000 a month for the last quarter of 1938.

Modern Bathroom Varied in Style

In making plans for a bathroom, either in modernization or in new construction, one of the first points to consider is the style and location of the bathtub. Once bathtubs were as alike as peas in a pod. Today there are more than 20 different models and styles.

Unlike some home equipment, plumping fixtures are not subject to seasonal style changes. New models are an outcome of constant study in relation to the problems of sanitation, safety, practicability, and the needs and desires of the public.

Design trends are toward a lower fixture. Some of the newer models measure only 16 inches from the floor to the rim, thus making it easy to step in and out.

Home Building Costs Low Now, Statistics Show

Construction Materials Still Priced Far Below 'Normal' Year of 1926

Construction materials, representing approximately 55 per cent of a structure's final cost, are still priced far below costs for the so-called "normal" year of 1926, and last year's figures showed a decline of 6 per cent from the preceding year's costs, a study of United States Department of Labor statistics reveals.

Making public these figures here, the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association, national organization of the country's 23,000 lumber and building material dealers, pointed to advantages for prospective home owners planning to build on today's market.

Cost index figures, compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for 1938 and just made public, show that building materials as a group stood at 90.3 for the year, on the basis of the 1926 average of 100. This is a decline of approximately 6 per cent from the 1937 average cost figure.

Significance of this decline on the total cost of a dwelling was stressed by Frank Carnahan, national secretary of the dealers' organization. In the field of low-cost housing, in which the association anticipates greatest activity during 1939, such a drop represents an important factor, he asserted.

"In the face of propaganda intimating that building costs are on the rise," Mr. Carnahan declared, "these Federal statistics speak for themselves. They show that the cost of building materials is still far below normal and that the trend over the past two years has been downward."

One of the largest drops in material costs, as shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics compilations, was registered by lumber, index figures of which stood at 90.9 for 1938, as compared with 99 for the preceding year.

A HOME of the OLD SOUTH

(Furnished)

Burnt Mills Hills

AN ARISTOCRAT, transplanted from the Sunny South, "THE VIRGINIAN" stands alone as an exclusive offering.

Possessing an atmosphere of elusive charm typical of the good old days when warm hospitality and generous living formed a large part of the life of the country gentleman, this mansion house constitutes an ideal living arrangement for the home-loving family of back-ground and appreciation.

Located in the heart of BURNT MILLS HILLS, known throughout the East as a rare creation of country homes on 1 to 5 acres, and but 20 minutes' drive from downtown Washington, it occupies a tract of 2½ acres of rolling land, beautifully landscaped, with extended views over many similar estates.

The house contains 6 bedrooms, 5 of master size; 4 tile baths, 2 lavatories; large living and dining rooms; paneled library; generous kitchen, all electric; large hallways on 1st and 2nd floors; 10-foot ceilings; maid's room and bath; built-in garages. Also clubroom.

The Mansion has been beautifully furnished by owner, and will be open for inspection Sunday from 11 a. m. to 6 p. m. Weekdays by appointment.

Location: Off the Colesville Pike, 3¼ miles beyond Silver Spring traffic light. Opposite the well-known "Norman House."

N. Y. Crowded Century Ago, Study Reveals

City's Rapid Growth Produced Many Complex Problems

Complaint of congestion in New York City was heard in 1801, although most of the 22½ square miles which composed the Island of Manhattan were yet to be improved, Sidney I. Pomerantz says in a study issued by the Columbia University Press.

The phenomenal growth of New York during the last years of the eighteenth century, Mr. Pomerantz finds, produced numerous complex municipal problems concerning such matters as sufficient housing, both for public and private purposes, adequate measures for fire prevention and fire-fighting, the building and maintenance of streets and roads, of docks, slips and wharves, and public and private land improvements.

Good ferry service, competent provision for keeping the city clean, the creation of a water supply system for the health and convenience of the populace, the development of esthetic interest in the appearance of the metropolis by the introduction of parks, the erection of statuary, the planting of trees and the initiation of a new city plan, were other pressing projects of the period.

1,000 Buildings Burned

"The devasting fire of 1776 had destroyed all the houses in the area between Broad and Whitehall streets, and along both sides of Broadway as far as Rector street, as well as most of the dwellings in the section between Broadway and the North River as far as Barclay street," Mr. Pomerantz explains, in part. "Approximately 1,000 buildings were ruined by this conflagration, and another blaze two years later took further toll of property.

"During the British occupation of the city no effort has been made to rebuild the gutted districts, and squatters took advantage of the general neglect to erect canvas shelters amidst the ruined structures, especially in the burnt section between Broad and Whitehall streets, which became known as 'Canvas Town.'

"To reconstruct the entire area became a major problem of the post-war era. Other building needs were concerned with renovations and repairs for the neglected private dwellings and public structures, and there was hardly one in the city that was not in this category as a result of the war-time occupation. With one-fourth of New York's prewar dwelling capacity in ruins and many other houses in need of urgent repair before they could be rendered habitable, a serious shortage of living quarters developed, which made a program of rehabilitation most imperative.

Repair War Ravages

"Outside of enforcing certain building restrictions, the corporation played no part in the construction of private homes. That phase of the rebuilding process was left solely to individual initiative, which lost no time in beginning to repair the ravages of war. Within a few years most of the shacks in the burnt district were demolished to make way first for cheap frame structures. After 1790 these in turn were displaced by 'elegant brick houses.'

"On the eve of the Revolution there were about 4,000 houses in the city. Three years after the British evacuation the number was approximately 3,240. But by 1790 there were from 4,500 to 5,000 dwellings, an indication of the rapidity with which homes were being erected. In the last decade of the century, building went on at an accelerated pace. By 1794, when some 850 new houses were built, it is estimated that there were 8,900 houses in New York. Despite this activity in construction, living quarters failed to keep up with the increasing demand, and rents rose rapidly. By 1800, building operations were as numerous as in previous years, though there appears to have been a wide choice of accomodations, as there was much moving about on May 1, the city's traditional moving day.

City Expanded Rapidly

Not only had there been much reconstruction, but new dwellings were erected in the outlying portions of the community. On the eve of the Resolution, the city had been built up to about the present Roosevelt street in the area east of Broadway and a little beyond Chambers street, west of Broadway. By 1789, the eastern section of close settlement was extended northward so that it reached Bayards lane—Bullock, present Broome street, and the western area was advanced a block beyond Chambers street to Reade street.

From the Battery to the northern limits was about a mile and a half on the east and a mile on the west. By 1796 a further advance northward took place, the outer limits of settlement this time being about 12-3 miles from the southern tip of the island. Both east and west of Broadway the city's outskirts touched what is now Houston street.

"By the end of the century the town's built-up area did not extend beyond the line already reached a few years before, inasmuch as to the south of it there were large vacant spaces still to be built upon and much swampy ground, especially in the neighborhood of the East River, and Lispenard's meadows on the west. Despite this circumstance and the added consideration that most of the 22½ square miles that composed the Island of Manhattan were yet to be improved, complaint was already heard in 1801 that the city was becoming a congested place in which to live.

"The new homes that were erected in the closing years of the eighteenth century did not suffer by comparison with those of prewar construction. To the Walton and DePeyster mansions of the Colonial era were added equally prominent structures, one of the most pretentious being the Macomb house, residence of President Washington in 1790. The dwellings of the wealthy were common in the Bowling Green district, and on Broadway, Whitehall, Beaver, Broad, Water, Pearl, Vesey and Barclay streets. Moreover, northward beyond the city limits stately country houses dotted the landscape.

"Gov. John Drayton, of South Carolina, who visited New York in June, 1793, wrote: 'The rides in the neighborhood of the city are for miles beautiful. Every elevation of ground, presenting some handsome country seat. With what pleasure, have I often viewed them.' Many of these villas had been built before the war; others were of more recent construction.

Entries Rising In Build Your Home Contest

One Shows Residence Of 20,000 Cubic Feet To Cost Only $9,000

Entries are increasing in the "Build Your Own Home Contest" of the Permanesque Homes Village, Inc., arousing interest in it large residential development near Alexandria, Va., called Beverley Hills. Beautiful and interesting plans are being evolved from the many sketches and ideas submitted by competitors.

One drawing published recently shows a handsome residence of 20,000 cubic feet content, which, it is announced, would not exceed $9,000 in cost, if erected in the Beverley Hills community. Under rules of the competition, those seeking the prizes, amounting to $2,500, must be definite home buying propects and select lots in Beverley Hills. Plans they submit must call for homes of not more than 20,000 cubic feet content.

Sketches and designs must also provide for dwellings conforming to structural and architectural standards already estabished in the development. Entries mnst be on file at the office of the developing corporation by March 15, and houses to be built from designs entered must be completed by July 1. Contestants are permitted to select their own architects or builders, if they desire, or utilize facilities of the Permanesque organization.

To reach Beverley Hills, drive over Memorial Bridge to Arlington Memorial, take the road to left continue past the Little Tea House on South Arlington Ridge road, or Mount Vernon avenue, and preceed along the ridge to Russell road and turn right. Entrance to the project is only a few hundred feet beyond.

Four Homes Planned

Oliver B. Cassell will build for David Cooper four two-story brick residences at 211-213 and 217-219 Forty-seventh street northeast, costing $16,000. T. W. Valentine designed them.

Decorators Have Smart Ideas for Walls, Slip-Covered, Striped and Floralled

Painted Drapes Aid Room With White Walls

Alcoves Widely Used; Bamboo Also Gives Decorative Effect

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

It's much easier to settle down with ivory walls and let the house go at that. But it will look taken-for-granted, don't forget that. So before giving up to mediocrity, consider some of the dramatic ideas that the leading decorators suggest for making the walls assume design responsibility in smart rooms. Remember that about two-thirds of the area of the room is wall space . . . no wonder it will make or break the room, however nice the other furnishings may be.

Here are alluring wall ideas put forth in exhibits seen recently. And oh, lady, lady, don't admit your age by being shocked at the unexpected. You don't have to take up every novelty that comes along, but 'twill keep your taste fresh and gay to consider the novelties and be open-minded to the dramatics of decorating.

Slip covered walls—Why didn't anybody think of that before? A plain painted room can achieve seasonal distinction if you hang a slip cover from the moulding to cover a single wall. I saw the idea tried out fetchingly with a striped fabric slip covering the fireplace wall in a room with the other walls in a dark tone.

With Striped Walls

Flowered ceilings—Don't gasp till you've thought it over. A flowered wall paper (without an up and down motif) is very gay on the ceiling of a room where side walls are striped. Cut-outs of the floral design can be grouped at the corners to straggle down the walls a bit.

Painted draperies—And to frame the fireplace, what's more! Very smart, too, you'll say if you had seen it done in a room with white walls festooned with a drapery of amethyst color painted over the fireplace.

Glass brick panels—Set on either side of a fireplace are stunning if there are luxuriant plants to silhouette against them. These plants grow in bulit-in troughs in the window sill and through the glass brick comes plenty of sunlight to keep them hardy.

Alternating florals—For a stair well that presents such broad expanses of wall to cope with, here's a bright idea—have alternating strips of plain and floral paper both with backgrounds of the same tone. They can be joined by a narrow border or not. Select a floral that won't leave an unfinished motif at the seam of course.

To Match

Walls and chintz to match—One of my pet foibles. You can buy charming French wall paper with chintz of the same design, and a more delightful idea for certain rooms I can't imagine. To give your maple a new lease on life . . . to dramatize French provincial things . . . to refresh colonial mahogany. Most of the patterns are sprigs or smallish bouquets with an old stuffy sort of charm about them.

Collections on the walls—There's a vogue now for using wall brackets to exhibit special treasures. Brackets in gilt or white plaster, in mahogany or maple or glass all can make genial patterns on the right wall. To hold small ivories, porcelains, terra cottas, bronzes, or flowers—they adapt themselves genially to decorative use.

Alcoves—actual or optical—are being used widely to vary wall interest. An alcove is a fine way to get extra closet or shelf space out of your corners without spoiling the looks of the wall. The alcove that results may be mirrored or papered or painted. It may be a recess for bed, dressing table or desk, or it may be a frame for a fine painting or piece of sculpture. An effect of an alcove where there really isn't one can often be achieved by wallpaper borders or panels, or by clever use of moldings.

Bamboo walls—The effect of a bamboo wall can be achieved with a new wood weave wall covering simulating bamboo. It is attached to the wall at the molding so that you can take it with you when you move from one home to another. Quite a neat little trick, say I. It would be a smart idea to use on just one wall, for instance, to vary the monotony of plain painted surfaces.

Mural walls—it is quite the thing to let pastel murals dominate the fireplace wall these days. In two of the most dramatic new rooms I've seen, murals have presided with the fireplace opening finished with molding and the mantel shelf omitted.

Parquet walls—Very exciting indeed is a dining room in which the parquet floor is continued on up to cover one wall. The remaining three walls of the room are a brilliant green.

Wall Paper in Alcoves Gives Pleasing Contrast

Here wall paper is used to line the alcoves of this bedroom and achieve a pleasant contrast with the plain walls. The colorings in this bedroom are French blue and lemon yellow

New Theater and Shopping Center for Arlington

Drawing of projected theater and shopping center to be erected for Glebe Parking Stores, Inc., owner, on Glebe road, at Randolph street, adjoining Buckingham, in Arlington, Va. The project will include a theater seating 1,000 persons, 20 bowling alleys, 12 stores, auto service station and parking for more than 300 cars. It is expected the center, costing approximately $250,000, will be ready June 1. C. H. Hillegeist Co. is exclusive agent

Goodrich Official Here for Parleys

Estimating the manufacture of approximately 50,000,000 tires in 1939 and anticipating a sales gain of at least 15 per cent in the tire industry this year, R. McTammany, assistant general sales manager of the B. F. Goodrich Co., Akron, Ohio, is in Washington for sales conferences.

McTAMMANY

"The tire industry experienced a substantial increase in replacement tire sales during the last quarter of 1938 and it is believed that this will be sustained well into 1939," McTammany said, in part. "If estimates of 3,500,000 new cars and trucks during 1939 prove well founded, 5,000,000 more original equipment tires will be required this year than last. Farm vehicles and implements of all types are now using rubber tires and more than half of the agricultural tractors built during 1938 were turned out with rubber tires instead of steel. Even the plow, one of the oldest of farming tools, may now be equipped with specially designed pneumatic tires, and others are available for 40 types of agricultural implements and all wheeled farm tractors.

"The average American passenger car tire bill will be about $17 during 1939, or less than 8 per cent of the car owner's expenditures for tires 30 years ago, when most cars required at least five new tires yearly and average tire mileage was only about 3,000 miles. Tire improvement has been due to many factors, including the acrievements of research." Other Goodrich Co. officials here are N. A. Glantz, field sales promotion manager, tire division, and A. R. Bowlzer, assistant sales promotion manager.

Chicken Loaf Firm Moves to New Home

Wharton Chicken Loaf Co. reports its removal to a new address at 1409 Fourteenth street northwest, where an improved product is announced. New equipment has been installed. Improved methods of cooking and personal supervision by Mr. Wharton, founder and originator of the product, give promise to an even greater demand for the popular dish. The same standards of delivery and service are announced.

Paint Accomplishes Modernization Wonders

Paint accomplishes modernization wonders and at small expense. Furniture that has lost its freshness may be rejuvenated by a coat or two of paint harmonizing with the color of the room.

Freshly varnished floors and newly painted or enameled woodwork reduce cleaning worries.

Dodge Truck Starts Round Trip to Peru

14,000-Mile Jaunt to Bring Inca Collection For New York Fair

Officially started by Mayor La Guardia, of New York, on a 14,000-mile "good will trip" to South America, with Lima, Peru, as the terminus, a Dodge truck passed through Washington last week and was met here by Federal officials and representatives of the Peruvian government.

Announcement of the trip first came from the office of J. D. Burke, director of Dodge truck sales, who explained that the tour, the first of its kind into South America, includes a visit to the historic Inca country in the Andes Mountains. Through arrangements by Manuel B. Llosa, commissioner general of Peru to the New York World's Fair, the truck will return with a collection of Inca relics and artifacts loaned by the Peruvian government to Dodge for exhibition at the fair.

En route to Peru the truck will stop in key cities to receive letters from mayors to the Lord Mayor of Lima. These messages will express cordiality between two nations. Another purpose of the trip is to emphasize the importance of completing a Pan American highway to join the Americas in commercial transportation. A connecting link making possible a highway for commercial transport would open new trade markets for the industries of North and South America.

Peru long has had a progressive program in respect to highway building. The tour to Peru is a tribute to the highway plan of President Benavides, whose government is spending one-sixth of its budget on highway improvements and will call attention to the miles of good highway in Peru. So enthusiastically was the tour approved in Peru the government passed a special law loaning Dodge certain valuable Inca relics. One museum piece to be taken to New York for exhibition is a mannikin of great value, insured for $50,000. Driver of the vehicle is Edson A. Smith, a champion truck driver from Detroit. Smith won his title in a recent contest.

LAST CHANCE TO SEE THIS NEW MODEL APARTMENT HOME

Exhibit Home—3908 South 7th St.—Arlington, Va.

American Homes Corporation presents this perfected model Apartment Home for inspection of home buyers and housing experts ONLY until 10 P. M. this Sunday night. The prior model was described by its owner to a prominent FHA representative as "A $110 A MONTH CONNECTICUT AVENUE APARTMENT AT ONE-FOURTH THE COST" and it is the last word on the housing problem. Built of concrete masonry, steel and glass, it encloses a large apartment modern in detail and equipment, with automatic hot water and oil heat, a large unfinished recreation room and full basement, lot 50x100 or more, landscaped. This is the large improved model originated by us. Do not be fooled by imitators building small or artificial stone front copies of our old experimental models: despite notice we will protect our legal rights in all of our designs, whether perfected or experimental. Now you can own your own apartment at half or a fourth of your rent for a comparable apartment, with Winter-Summer air conditioning. WHY WASTE $18,000 IN RENT IN 25 YEARS (AT $60 PER MONTH)? February contracts accepted at $5,190; ONLY $519 DOWN and 89c PER DAY PAYS OFF FHA MORTGAGE AND ALL INTEREST. After March 1st, price is to be $5,290 due to increased cost of materials, etc. A few blocks away is the beautiful modern Colonial Home, same price and terms, at 1732 South Pollard St. Lots in best sections included.

Few 'Nine-Day Wonders' Win Place in Sun of Hollywood's Celluloid Heaven

If you're in the headlines, filmland has a job for you. Of course, the job never lasts long, but while it does last you'll get plenty of action. Sonja Henie, left, who got into pictures because she was news in skating events, is one of the few to survive. She turned out to be a good little actress, too. A current ballyhoo queen who shows promise of lasting more than one picture is Princess Baba of Sarawak, circle, who was a hit in her first film. She arrived in Hollywood because her father is the only white rajah, because he disinherited her when she married the European middleweight wrestling champion, Bob Gregory, and because the facts were frequently mentioned in the newspapers.

Louise Hovick, above, better known as Gypsy Rose Lee, was swept into films on a wave of publicity some months ago but, after four films, returned to the stage. Douglas Corrigan, left, is playing himself in the forthcoming "Flying Irishman." The studio will get a lot of publicity by using him instead of an actor but the chances are that he won't stay in Hollywood long.

Studios Use Celebrities For Color, Then Forget

Princess Baba and Sonja Henie Prove Exceptions, Winning Movie Careers Through Acting Ability

By Lucie Neville.

Hollywood.

There are some actors in Hollywood's celluloid circus who never play more than one performance, but for that brief time they get more attention than the stars.

These sideshow players aren't freaks, but they are good for freak publicity, a sort of ballyhoo bait to get the fans' attention before a film is released. These 9-day wonders are recruits from everywhere—hoboes and Back Bay socialites, strip-teasers and wrestlers, jitterbug teams and hog-callers, beauty contest winners and sneezing experts.

Often there isn't any reason for their being in a picture, except for the publicity. Naturally, RKO will get more ballyhoo for its "Flying Irishman" by hiring Douglas Corrigan, instead of a movie actor, to play Douglas Corrigan. But it was just as legitimate by Movietown standards for Paramount to give bit roles to California's handsomest taxi driver and Hollywood's prettiest waitress, winners of studio-conducted contests which had reaped wide publicity.

It is unfortunate if any of these non-acting players hope for a movie career. When Hollywood crooks a finger and says, "C'mere a minute," it means just that. Usually hired to play themselves in a few scenes, they are finished with the picture.

A few of them do make the grade, though. There is a current nine-day wonder girl at Universal who shows promise of lasting for more than one picture.

Case Is Exception

Her case was typical at first. The W. C. Fields picture, "You Can't Cheat an Honest Man." had a bit role—a non-vibrating Litttle Egypt in veils and harem trousers—to dress up Edgar Bergen's and Charlie McCarthy's circus act. Any prettty stock girl would have done, but she would have been useless for press ballyhoo.

A publicity-natural was found in Princess Baba of Sarawak, who had movie aspirations but no dramatic experience except curtsying before the King when she was presented at Britain's court. British papers already had made headline whooptedoo over her when she married Bob Gregory, middleweight wrestling champion of Europe. The wedding was news because the bride was the youngest daughter of Sir Charles Vyner Brooke, only white rajah in the world and hereditary ruler of Borneo's Sarawak. It was like a shilling novel—royalty defiantly marrying a commoner and being theatrically disinherited.

When the young couple came to America, the wrestler's tour was publicized, not on his record, but on his wife's rank and the family feud The tour ended in Los Angeles and, since the couple was earning its own way, it was logical even for royalty to get a job.

The movie publicity tie-up also was logical, not to say a gift from heaven, and Princess Baba of Sarawak became Princess Baba of Universal. It was played up for all it was worth, the title used even on the picture's side-show banners; the studio's publicity department got to practicing salaams in private.

But the sultry-looking blonde photographed unexpectedly well and more lines were added to the bit role until she was included in every scene with Ventriloquist Bergen and his boy. Now Universal is talking about a contract which would take her out of the freak-exploitation class. Whether she will be successful as "Valerie Brooke, actress," can't be predicted but the studio has agreed that the princess stuff will be dropped and she may use her own name in future pictures.

Henie Won Stardom

Only one nine-day wonder girl has achieved stardom — Sonja Henie. Hired for her skating, she had a heavy figure and a heavier accent, but no acting experience or even ambitions. But she was a showman, and between her ability and her studio's careful planning of pictures that would justify continued skating roles, she is a box-office topper.

In Miss Henie's case, movie publicity works both ways because her tours, managed independently of her studio, are ballyhooed in advance by her films. Naturally, 20th-Fox was happy for Miss Henie to include in her road show the "Alice in Wonderland" number that is in her current picture.

Other sports champions have been numerous, but few have been even moderately successful. Bobby Jones made a series of golf shorts and Babe Ruth, at the height of his career, was the hero of "The Babe Comes Home." Jack Dempsey even had his nose remodeled for the screen, but he turned out to be something less than a Barrymore.

Slapsie Maxie Rosenbloom is the only fighter to develop dramatic ability. After his role in "The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse," Warner Brothers gave him a contract; his studio actually thinks that he is such a good actor that it now pays little attention to his ring career, though it still is active and successful

He came to Hollywood in 1933, after losing his light-heavyweight championship, to make a quickie called "Mr. Broadway." His friendly St. Bernard face began to be in demand for ring-type roles and he made a hit in "Nothing Sacred" with his telephone conversation scene.

It was with mutual best wishes that Louise Hovick and 20th-Fox parted company a few months ago, after a year's trial. As strip-teaser Gypsy Rose Lee, she was the darling of the runway fans and earning a very respectable salary. When Park Avenue decided she was Art, movie agents in New York persuaded her to come out and play in something provocatively called "You Can't Have Everything."

She made four more pictures before both sides called it quits. The studio's explanation was that it never had a suitable picture to display Miss Hovick's—er, ability.

Stokowski Lent Dignity

In a long jump from the burlesque stage, Hollywood lands world-famous musicians for ballyhoo bait. Leopold Stokowski, playing himself in "100 Men and a Girl," lent just the right kind of dignified publicity suitable to a Deanna Durbin picture. He breaks the one-minute rule, however, because he is working now on a score to accompany a Disney film, but he will appear briefly in it, then only in silhouette. Jascha Heifetz also will be seen and heard in a Goldwyn picture.

Sometimes this brief glory goes to their heads. It did to Jeff Davis' baldish one after only three days of acting. Brought here as technical adviser and publicity stooge for Paramount's "Arkansas Traveler," the King of American Hoboes was paid a fat salary. Pictures showed him instructing Bob Burns in the art of making mulligan stew and he was interviewed on how it felt to live in luxury after years of hoboing.

His actual acting was one line and no emoting was needed for his brief scene of carrying a saw. But Davis evidently valued his time highly, because he sued the studio for $50,000 for the three days of acting. His claim was settled out of court for a few dollars.

Stars Now Employ Business Managers To Protect Them

Hollywood (AP).—Stars and their money are soon parted—but that was once upon a time.

Now most of the stars have business managers or counselors who protect them, as far as possible, from the 101 ways in which they can shovel earnings down the sink to schemers.

Recently a big parade of Hollywood stars marched into Federal offices to be questioned in the case of William Buckner and William Gillespie, who are accused in New York State of attempted sale of fraudulent Philippine railroad bonds. Questioning revealed no stellar buyers, left questioners mainly with Loretta Young's tribute to Buckner, "He's a lovely boy!"

George Burns, Jack Benny and other movie and radio stars have been embarrassed by their alleged connection with the Chapereau smuggling charges—but time was when, in a similar case, most of Hollywood would have been equally embarrassed. For Hollywood ever has been a paradise for the get-rich-quicker, a happy hunting ground for the sharper. There's always a lot of money lying around loose—owned by people who don't know how to spend it, coveted by people who do.

That's why the bona fide business manager, a trusted agent for the star's spending and saving, has come into importance in Hollywood.

Hollywood's first business manager, who still handles movie incomes exclusively, is J. S. Rex Cole, whose clients include Warner Baxter, Tay Garnett, Henry King, Constance Bennett, Robert Montgomery, Grace Moore, and two dozen others.

Many picture people, brilliant in film work, might make excellent business men, Cole thinks, if they did not choose—wisely, he adds—to devote all their energies to creative work. He cites Robert Montgomery, Ernst Lubitsch, Warner Baxter and several others to back his opinion.

But actors usually haven't time for business. Many are emotional, subject to impulsive purchases or sales. Many haven't the slightest idea what to do with money when Hollywood suddenly showers them with it.

Perhaps the most exclusive club in the country, including even the celebrated Somerset Club, of Boston, and the various little hunting and fishing associations which men of vast means are so fond of organizing, is, of all things, a woman's tong, and its headquarters is, naturally, in Manhattan. It isn't really organized, but its entrance requirements are probably the stiffest of any group in the world, since membership is based upon one distinguished achievement alone; the possession of a chinchilla coat. Besides chinchilla, the other costly properties of the world, star rubies and cabochon emeralds, shooting moors in Scotland, imported motorcars, yachts, Palm Beach villas, private cars, de luxe mistresses and even racings tables are as peanuts to pecans. Harper's Bazaar, for its February issue, wanted to run up a layout of chinchilla coats and wraps and was only able to find photographs of nine (eight of them Morocco shots by Zerbe, by the way) in existence. The photographed members of the Chinchilla Club are Mrs. Jay O'Brien, Mrs. Frank C. Henderson, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. James W. Corrigan, Mrs. George Washington Kavanaugh, Mrs Allen Lehman, Lupe Velez, Mrs. William Randolph Hearst and Mrs. Stephen Sanford. Others with chinchillas of note are Lily Pons, Mary Pickford, Mrs. Eric Loder, Mme. Francis Alda and Mrs. Corliss Sullivan (formerly Cleveland's legendary Lucy McKinney of Corrigan-McKinney fame) and that is just about all the really notable chinchilla owners in the United States that the leading furriers of Fifth avenue could think of. One reason why the Chinchilla Club has no waiting list, and probably never will have, is that Imperial Peruvian chinchillas, the finest of all fur bearers, are now practically extinct and that a live chinchilla in captivity where he may be bred is worth up to $1,700 on the hoof. The pelts themselves sometimes sell as high as $450 each, and when one considers that for Miss Pons' wrap 110 skins are required (and Miss Pons is on the tiny side at that), it is possible to understand just how snooty this club of fur-bearing ladies of fashion is. Mrs. Sullivan's coat, to be sure, was bought almost 30 years ago and for something less than $40,000 at the time, so that in the light of mounting prices, until only one or two coats a year now appear on the market, it can be regarded as something of an investment. Most chinchillas now come from Bolivia, the Argentine and Peru, where they live in almost inaccessible mountain fastnesses, and, since only the backs of the tiny animals are used, it takes a considerable number to make up any sort wrap. The members of the Chinchilla Club can, obviously, turn up their noses even at the members of the Royal Yacht Squadron.

Nothing could more humorously illustrate the various viewpoints on life in general of Boston and New York than a comparison of the doings at a meeting in each metropolis of the local Wine and Food Society. Co-ordinately organized for essentially the same purposes, the two chapters, while quite separate, are presumably dedicated to two good causes, the pleasure and social foregathering of their members and the promotion of sound eating and reasonable drinking, particularly in the field of wine rather than spirits, among the general public. Although recruited from precisely the same social strata in the two communities and dedicated to the same theses, nothing could be more different than two of the dinners of these clubs. The New York society, of which Richardson Wright is the distinguished president and Crosby Gaige the prime mover, foregathers in full-dress conclave at the hotel restaurant selected for the occasion, seldom dines off fewer than six rather elaborate courses, often ten, and is awash with reporters, photographers and society scribes who will ultimately retail the fine gustatory doings to a by-no-means indifferent public. In fact, the publicity attendant thereto is almost as essential to one of the New York dinners as is the sole, souffle and cognac. The Boston society, on the other hand, gets together in an atmosphere of almost clandestine secrecy, the gentlemen wear nothing more formal than dinner jackets, and four courses, beautifully served but with a suppression of panache that would seem positively bourgeousie to one of Manhattan's knee-breeched and gold-chained major domos, is about the limit. Reporters are kept rigidly at bay and a photographer on the premises would cause far more terror and consternation than a bomb tossed through the window. Your New Yorker of celebrity and circumstance may be photographed 20 times an evening and has learned to assume a camera-proof facade any time after 6 o'clock, but Bostonians still regard news photography as socially tantamount to hiding in a patrol wagon. The first of Boston's wine and food dinners

Pages From a Journalist's Diary

New York.

So many letters come to me from readers who plan or hope to be in New York during the current year, that I feel I must answer them in a column.

I try to answer each of these inquirers personally. Yet, the questions asked are so similar in most cases, that I think it may be possible to write one column that will answer thousands of questioners at once.

The typical letter says, in substance: "I have always wanted to visit New York. I hope to do it during the World's Fair. I have a limited amount of money to spend. Where should I go; what should I see, for the money and time at my disposal?"

Not easy to answer in a general way. Please do not feel that I have any objection to answering specific questions of correspondents. I am happy to do it, to the extent of my time and ability. I believe, however, that I may be able to answer a good many questions in advance, thus:

The two classes of people you will come into closest contact with in New York are policemen and taxi drivers. Unless you know your transportation lines well, it is better to take a taxi for almost all trips of reasonable length within the city.

Do not take a taxi to the fair. Not unless you have lots of money.

I was out at the fair the other day, attending something that was to have a sausage testing, a wiener roast, or something like that. It turned out to be a speaking contest, a statistics marathon and a starvation experiment. Five of us hired a taxi after the first hour of speaking and starving. When I left the cab at Fifty-fifth street and Fifth avenue we had not checked too closely on the meter, but we were giving the late stayer $1 apiece for our ride. The clock probably said about $4 for the distance between the fair and the heart of Manhattan. That is expensive transportation, and you can do much better by subway.

It is extremely important for the total stranger in New York to realize this: Your most dependable friend is the uniformed policeman. There is not one chance in 1,000,000 that he will let you down. When in doubt about anything, consult a uniformed policeman. If you hide nothing from him, tell him that you read in this column that he would be your friend, the busiest policeman in New York will take all the time required to advise you, guide and direct you.

Clergymen in New York are extremely busy persons, no matter what their denomination or where their church. They are generally difficult to reach. So don't count too much upon talking it over with the preacher of the church which represents the same religious faith you have been living with in your home town. In most cases you will get no farther than the young lady who is secretary or receptionist in the business office of the church. The ministers are not inhuman. They are simply too busy to see strangers. The well-trained secretaries are apt to be a bit cold and impersonal, from the point of view of the person who comes from a smaller city. Some of those girls can bring your temperature down to zero in two sentences.

Still, if there is serious difficulty, you can get at the clergyman. I strongly recommend that Travelers Aid. You will find uniformed representatives of this organization in the rail terminals, or you can reach them by telephone. They know everything. They will positively protect the stranger from racketeers if he can be relied upon to follow directions. The Travelers Aid can get in touch with the clergyman of your denomination if that is necessary.

Please remember this about taxi drivers in New York. Each one of them works under direct supervision of the police department. In case of any difference with a driver, call a policeman and tell him the whole story, calmly and without paying any attention to what the driver says.

If you think the driver is giving you the merry-go-round, merely say to him, "Drive me to the nearest police station." He is required to do exactly that, and if he's wrong, he stands to lose his license.

There is a meter in every taxi, and this meter is inspected regularly. There is small chance that it isn't working properly. It must be lighted, and the driver must not throw the lever in such a way as to make the face of the meter blank. He must allow you to see and read the meter at all times, until you have paid your bill.

In the cab, within plain sight of the rider, there are two cards. One carries the driver's photograph and description, name and number. Strangers should make a practice of jotting down name and number of driver on each taxi ride.

Sport Ward, architect, smokes a pipe with a devil-may care expression that many of the more worldly about-towners strive vainly to imitate. Grosvenor Atterbury, another architect, smokes an old-fashioned cob pipe with a meditative air. Bob Brinkerhoff, cartoonist, gets an expression of amiable benevolence into his pipe-smoking. Harry Maule, book editor, gives the pipe a scholarly twist, while Rex Beach, author, cocks his head at a rakish angle and puffs the pipe-smoke out gustily, as though he were having a great adventure. Montfort Armory, artist and antiquarian, gets an immense lift out of his pipe. He loves to clean it, stroke its bowl affectionately. J. P. Morgan smokes a deeply stained meerschaum which gives him a fine excuse for delaying answers to questions. He likes to take several final puffs before answering. In the meantime, Thomas Lamont, his partner, may speak up, and Mr. Morgan can go right on smoking.

was, to be sure, open to the press, but a rude cameraman actually photographed a well known banker with a cocktail glass in his hand and the banker was forced to leave town for the remainder of the season. In New York the most conservative bankers are grateful if they get photographed lying on the floor wrapped in the tablecloth with a bottle in the mouth.

That wonderful Tyrolean hat being worn so jauntily by Skipper Williams, dean of ship-news reporters and the glory of the New York waterfront, is a hat with a history. To begin with, nobody, while the memory of man runneth, has ever seen the Skipper in anything but the cast-iron derby which came to be as closely associated with his person as his wing collar, black string tie and elephant scarfpin. To imagine him without his pot hat was unthinkable, but one day a few weeks ago, while boarding the Queen Mary, a gust of wind whisked it off his head and into the waters of the lower bay. "Full speed astern!" screamed the Skipper. "All hands on deck regardless of occupation!" but the hat was irretrievably gone, and the next day the green Tyrolean number with a feather a foot long made its appearance, with the Skipper looking like nothing so much as Prince Danillo in "The Merry Widow." The Barge Office to a man was graveled. Nothing like it had ever been seen before, let alone on the majestic head of the most dignified of all ship-news men. It seems that the hat was a gift of Mme. Jeritza, in whose chalet near Salzburg the Skipper and Mrs. Williams passed their vacation last summer, and she had made him promise to wear it for her. The Skipper had never had the nerve to wear it before his pot hat blew away, and now the boys at the Barge Office are getting up a petition to Mme. Jeritza to please send him a new cast-iron derby, as he doesn't look natural without it. Tyrolean hats may be all right for bell ringers, college boys and Alpine climbers, they argue, but not for the Skipper.

AROUND THE BOULEVARDS: Frank Chapman is back from Florida with an enormous hamper of those fabled rock crabs, which he is sending around to friends . . . Bob Davis writes from Mexico City: "Come on in, the tequila is fine!" . . . If that Chicago penny-liner imagines he coined something when he called the inmates of the cafes "saloon society" he might well look at the columns of Manhattan's own Maury Paul, who began using it five years ago . . . Selmer Fougner's "Dining Out in New York," which will appear in the bookstalls shortly, bids fair to be the best gourmet's guide since George Ross's "Tips on Tables," which, while excellent, is now out of date. . . . How the Baron Fougner manages to get in and out of so many saloons, ordinaries, class joint, deadfalls, bistros, eateries and cook shops without ever having to go to Battle Creek is one of the seven wonders of New York. . . . The monocled and literary Achmed Abdullah caused consternation at the Radio Franks Club last week by demanding an order of spinach soup with a poached egg in it. . . . Said it was a well known combination in the Orient. . . . The internal architectural convulsions that have been going on in the lobby of the Gotham have at last subsided and the hotel has opened its new gold cocktail lounge.

Home Is Where the Art Is

By WEARE HOLBROOK

One of our larger art galleries recently gave over its entire wall space to an exhibition of paintings by doctors. Not iodine or mercurochrome paintings, but oils and water colors. The subjects included the usual still-life, landscape and figure studies that are found in group exhibitions, and the technique in general was conservative but sound.

Judging by the number of items on display, the medical profession has been going in for art in a serious way, and the idea is not as bizarre as it may seem. The surgeon knows anatomy, and his touch is precise and delicate.

But the doctors are not the only ones who are turning to art as an avocation. Bankers, lawyers and famous statesmen now ply the brush and crayon in their spare time as enthusiastically as they used to play golf and read detective stories. They explain, with a deprecatory smirk, that they do it merely for relaxation, but secretly they are very proud of their self-made masterpieces. Men of affairs who used to be content with magazine covers and insurance-company calendars now prefer to unroll their own.

There is, in fact, a raging epidemic of artistry all over the country. I can remember the time when painting was regarded as little more than a ladylike accomplishment, like playing the harp. A girl took lessons on the theory that if she failed to catch a husband, art and music would be a solace to her during the long years of spinsterhood.

But today almost everyone I know is dabbling among the pigments. They paint with no sordid thought of gain, but simply for the joy of self-expression. Their amateur standing is secure and unimpeachable. And since they cannot sell their work, and storage space is limited, they must resort to giving it to their friends.

This brings up a problem of etiquette that might puzzle even Mrs. Post. Let us say that you drop in to call on an acquaintance and, like a bolt from the cobalt blue, he turns out to be an artist. With ill-concealed pride, he displays his latest canvas. It is a picture of a muddy-looking peasant woman holding a lopsided jug. She has one of those flat, triangular faces peculiar to the primitives; her hair is greenish, and her banana-like fingers suggest an advanced case of arthritis.

"What do you think of it?" your friend inquires, trying to sound casual. And there you are, standing with reluctant feet where both horns of the dilemma meet. If you are honest and say, "I think it's lousy," you cut him to the quick. If you are polite and say, "I think it's lovely," the chances are eight to five that he will give it to you; then you will have to put it up on your wall and keep it there against the time when its donor visits you. What to do?

Somewhat the same situation exists in literature. Every once in a while an aspiring poet corners me and reads me one of his metrical masterpieces. In most instances it is not bad enough to be funny or good enough to be breathtaking. I haven't sufficient knowledge of prosody to criticize it technically. Besides, listening to verse being read aloud always causes a creeping paralysis of my critical faculties; I just get sleepy. And so, when the reading is over, I simply register vague but earnest enthusiasm by saying, "Boy, I think you've got something there!"

But you can't say that with any conviction to an amateur artist. Though he may have something, he doesn't keep it long; he gives it to you. And though he may announce with Bohemian insouciance that he doesn't care what becomes of a picture after he's finished painting it, you can be sure that the next time he calls on you he'll give your home a quick once-over to see whether you've parked his little masterpiece in a good light.

Personally, I consider nothing lovelier than a blank wall, especially in a city apartment where space is at a premium; but in this opinion I seem to be practically alone. There used to be a vacant area above the mantelpiece in our front room. Many an evening I would sit gazing at this blessed bit of blankness and thinking no thoughts. All around it were things—bric-a-brac, furniture, pictures, lamps, curtains and other distractions. But above the mantelpiece there was nothing at all; it was like a nice thick slice of Nirvana.

However, this unoccupied territory seemed to arouse the predatory instincts of all my artistic friends. They lusted after it, as Hitler after Czechoslovakia. "You really need something up there," one would say. "A large landscape with plenty of soft grays and greens to give depth and distance to the room. Now, I happen to have the very thing for you——" "What this room lacks is warmth and color," another would inform me. "Say, a little portrait of a bullfighter with a red cape. Come to think of it, I just finished something of that kind last week——"

In self-defense I announced that I was already at work on a picture to fill the space over the mantel. I was very secretive about it, telling them nothing except that it was to be an oil painting. I selected oil as my imaginary medium because it requires more time than pastel or water color; it sometimes takes an artist a year to finish an oil painting, and I hoped that in the meantime my friends would forget about my legendary artistic career and grow accustomed to the hiatus above the hearth.

But no; they continued to ask how my painting was getting along; and my secrecy only stimulated their curiosity. "I'm afraid you can't fool them much longer." Phoebe said finally. "Yesterday Miss Maulsby asked me if she couldn't take just a teeny-weensy peek into your studio. I couldn't tell her that you had no studio; so I said that you were very temperamental and went into absolute tantrums if I even knocked on the door—and she said, 'Ah, these geniuses!' But you'll have to get busy and produce something, or people will begin to be suspicious."

"All right," I agreed recklessly, "bring me my brush and palette!"

Phoebe did better than that. She brought me everything an artist could possibly need, except inspiration—brushes, paints, turpentine, linseed oil, a smooth white canvas, a man-sized easel and, best of all, a smock. It was a gray linen smock that went on over the head and billowed from neck to knees in ample folds.

Setting my canvas on the easel in a good north light I began my painting in a business-like manner, starting at the upper left-hand corner and working down. It was to be a landscape at sunrise. I planned to make the sky blue at the top, introduce some yellow near the horizon where the sun was coming up, then combine yellow and blue for the green of the countryside, and put a fat red barn in the foreground. Grant Wood stuff, if you know what I mean.

The first day I got almost all the sky in place, which was very encouraging. The second day while putting in the sunrise I made the mistake of holding my palette upside down, with the result that my smock looked like an oversized order of omelet aux fines herbes.

Then when I got ready to paint the barn, I found the top of my tube of cadmium red stuck as tight as a Pullman window; it was necessary to perform a Caesarean operation to get it open, and more of the paint went on me than on the canvas.

And finally, just as I was establishing the subtle line of demarcation between barn and background, our pet dachshund bumped against the hind leg of the easel, and the entire canvas toppled over into my lap.

If I had been a real artist, no doubt I should have broken down and cried at this point. But instead I compared, critically, the canvas and the front of my smock, and decided that there was more paint on the latter. So I framed the smock. It hangs over the mantelpiece today—a colorful example of impressionism entitled "Work in Progress," with apologies to James Joyce.

After all, an artist shouldn't be wrapped up in his work all the time. Look what happened to Van Gogh.

The Once Over

The Hot Dog Now Putting On The Dog

By H. I. Phillips

They held a "preview" of hot dogs and hamburgers at the New York's World Fair the other day, and if that isn't something new in swank, you get three more guesses. It was held for the benefit of the press and some selected guests, the idea being to show to what extent the frankfurter and the hamburger sandwich can be glorified if one really is determined enough.

The event was really a formal showing of the Hot Dog of Tomorrow and its proper sphere in the World of Tomorrow.

If you had any idea that the frankfurter and roll, together with the hamburger sandwich, were common foodstuffs capable of no style or swank, you should have seen what the World's Fair is doing to 'em.

The preview included a showing of what was called "Frank Swanks," or 57 ways to prepare a frankfurter. One concoction was the "Frankfurter Quail," and consisted of a dog served with cheese and bacon. Then there was the Hamburger World's Fair, the meat wrapped around a pickled onion and dipped into egg batter and corn flakes and fried brown.

It would not be thought unusual if a society debutante posed with an all-hot in her hand at the big coming-out party and some of our leading dowagers can't get through the day without a dog with lots of mustard

If that isn't giving glamour to a hamburger and onion, what is?

The fried, boiled, broiled, steamed and fricasseed frankfurter were also shown and they even had new models in rolls. Nothing looked like its old self except the mustard.

When a World Fair goes to all this trouble to publicize hot dogs and hamburgers you get some idea of the place of prominence they have come to occupy in our national life. The hot dog has just about become Edible No. 1, with the "catmeat and onion" a close second.

The hot dog really got its real start at baseball parks, where it almost replaced the peanut, but it was not until the New Deal came into power that it found real recognition in a big way. President Roosevelt will go down into history as the man who gave the hot dog its first boost. He revealed himself as a genuine hot-dog addict. Stories were sent out about his appetite for the frankfurter and roll and the newsreels even had pictures of him tackling them.

Mrs. Roosevelt came out with a few kind words for them, too, and in no time the country was frankfurter conscious.

Now people who would never get near a lowly "dog" in the old days, when class distinctions were class distinctions, go for them avidly. It would not be thought unusual if a society debutante posed with an all-hot in her hand at the big formal coming-out party and some of our leading dowagers can't get through the day without a dog with lots of mustard.

It's the same way with hamburgers. Of course hamburgers were always a little more upper-class than dogs. The hamburger has always been a victim of manhandling, however, and you could count on the fingers of one hand the cooks who knew how to turn out a hamburger that didn't taste like something left over from the cat's breakfast. The general inclination is to think that a hamburger is just a wad of fifth-grade meat, pounded into a disc and flung into a frying pan for about 3 minutes, the onion being applied to hide the fact that the meat tastes awful.

A hamburger can be made, however, so that it is a highly palatable, not to say delicious, article of food. But it takes, first of all, something besides dog meat. It requires some good grade steak, well chopped and with no tough ends tossed in. It should be grilled if it is to be at its best, and under no circumstances should it be fried in lard or substitutes. If you must fry it, use butter.

If the World's Fair reveals to the world the right way to cook a hamburger it will have contributed much to the happiness and joy of the human race. And it looks as though it would so do.

There is no telling how much indigestion in America is due to old-fashioned hamburger sandwiches, but it is probably terrific. At the hot-dog and hamburger preview, hamburgers were really made from meat fit to eat and some attention was even paid to the toast.

If anything has been neglected in American life it is toast. And the World's Fair may do something about that too.

Grover Whalen promises that toast will look like toast and, what is more, that it will taste like toast. More power to him.

It appears that there will be 90 hot-dog and hamburger stands at the Fair and it has been figured out that for every ten paid admissions to a World's Fair three and a half sandwiches are sold. Believe it or not, there are people who spend time figuring such things out.

All in all it will be quite a hot-dog and hamburger carnival. It makes us feel really interested in the New York World's Fair for the first time.

Grover, one frankfurter and one hamburg, please! And don't spare the swank!

Dale Carnegie Says—

I received a letter from a father last winter which I answered in one of my radio broadcasts, but it is so poignant and the subject so important that I'm going to repeat it here:

"I have one of the finest boys in the world. He's a Boy Scout; he's goodlooking and I'm proud of him. Yet I am losing his love. When he disobeys his mother or does things wrong, I fly into a tantrum and make life miserable for both of us. My business keeps me away from home much of the time, and while I am away, I make all sorts of good resolutions. Then I come home, find he has done something wrong again and I nag and bully and shout. This keeps up from Saturday night until Monday morning, and has gone on until I have lost 15 years of my boy's life."

Aren't you sorry, from the bottom of your heart, for a father with a problem like that? And don't you think the solution lies within himself? I felt that the best way for me to help him was to quote from a book by Earl Looker, "The White House Gang." Here is the story:

Young Quentin Roosevelt was a member of this White House Gang. One day the boys conceived the brilliant and agonizing feat of focussing mirrors to flash sunlight through the windows of the Army and Navy Building. A protest was sent to the President.

Did Theodore Roosevelt rush out and yell: "What in the name of common sense are you doing? Do I have to drop the affairs of the Nation to attend to you? Come upstairs this minute, and you just wait until I get through with you!" No! He called his personal aide, Capt. Archie Butt, scribbled out a message and sent Butt downstairs with full instructions.

Capt. Butt found the gang and said: "Boys, they are going to signal something from the top of the War Building . . ."

The War Building! Signals! What boy could resist that? A moment later a figure appeared on the roof, and with flags signalled:

You, under the trees, all of you. Attack on this building must immediately stop. Clerks cannot work. Government business interrupted. Report without delay to me, for you-know-what. Theodore Roosevelt.

How could you help worshipping and respecting a father who had the imagination to treat you like that? The boys knew they were in for it. But their pride had been spared. They hadn't been humilated.

And when they filed crestfallen into the President's study, he still kept up the game. With an absolutely straight face, he pretended to conduct a court martial and pronounced them guilty.

Let me get back to this letter from the man who wants to regain the love of his son. If he had written that letter to Theodore Roosevelt, what do you think Roosevelt would have advised him?

I once asked Helen Menken, famous stage and radio star, for a word to pass on to you who read this column.

"Tell them," she said, "not to let discouragement get them down; tell them they must be able to take it."

"Have you had to take it?" I asked.

"Don't you think so? Listen to this. A few years ago I needed a job badly, but neither on Broadway nor in Hollywood could I get anything. My sister had a dress shop on Madison avenue; she said I might help her. Well, a job was a job. And it seemed no use trying to go on with acting.

"One day a customer came in and ordered several dresses. She also wanted an undergarment which my sister didn't stock. She turned to me:

"'Go to that shop on the corner,' she said, 'and get me one. Hurry back.'

"The audacity of it! Understand, I had been successful on the stage for a long time.

"My sister looked up. 'Yes, run along, Helen,' she said.

"I rushed out, humiliated. I would never go back! To have come to this—an errand girl! Then I happened to glance up. There before me in a shop window was a five-word placard: 'So you can't take it.'

"I caught my breath. All of a sudden I faced what it would mean if I couldn't take it. Failure was certain. If I did it, maybe—just maybe—success would come again. With renewed hope, I went on and performed the errand. Then I again started the rounds, pounding pavements between the offices of casting directors. I got hold of the manuscript of "The Old Maid" and after some time and much effort got it produced. It was a tremendous success."

Helen Menken learned to "take it." Can you? If you can't, no one will want you in business and no one will want to be around you socially.

You will get off to a good start at any meeting if you feel you are a welcome member there. In most instances, somewhere along the line, this is or has been up to you.

Tex O'Rourke, famous after-dinner speaker, gives us two rules for making ourselves welcome:

1. On meeting a former acquaintance, never ask whether your name is remembered unless you are positive that it will be.

2. Never begin a telephone conversation by asking, "Do you know who this is?" They are much abused queries, as we well know.

Tex says he naturally can remember only a small percentage of the people he has met as Ranger, circus performer, newspaper man, sports promoter and after-dinner speaker, and that he is almost embarrassed by those "Do you remember me?" greetings. So is everyone else. Tex told me that he usually greets a casual acquaintance with some such remark as "Howdy, stranger . . . I'm Tex O'Rourke. I met you over at the Flying-Donut."

The National Marquee Relights With 'Of Mice and Men,' One of Year's Finer Plays

Musical Stars Take Flier In Field of Tragic Drama

"Of Mice and Men" Brings Versatile Cast To National Theater Tomorrow Night; Maurice Evans Outlines His Plans

By Nelson B. Bell

EVEN TO ITS VETERAN STUDENTS and most faithful adherents, the theater is a constant source of surprise. When I say "surprise" I do not mean "bewilderment" or "chagrin." I mean merely that there always seem available to those responsible for the purveyance of the better things of the parent theater talents that have been unsuspected and avenues of approach that have been untrod. It adds to the excitement of playgoing.

A conspicuous case in point is to be found in "Of Mice and Men," to be presented for the first time in Washington in the National Theater tomorrow night. When John Steinbeck was called upon to dramatize his own novel, he executed a superior work of craftsmanship. His play was hailed by the Broadway critics as one of the finest things of its season. Grim, relentless and tragic, yes, but a bit of dramaturgy so sagaciously conceived and so skillfully wrought that its stature among contemporary plays was assured.

Mr. Steinbeck and his producers relied upon no great "names" of the theater to insure the success of their excursion into the fertile field of adventure opened to them by the lives of the itinerant ranch hands of the West. Their play succeeded under the single force of its dramatic integrity. The principal roles in the original company, if a faulty memory, by some miracle, is in working order, were played by Crawford Broderick, son of that pungently penetrating comedienne of stage and screen, Helen Broderick, and Wallace Ford, also one who has contributed much to the eminence of the celluloids. So that is where the surprise comes in.

When "Of Mice and Men" is seen on the National stage tomorrow night, its foremost roles will be played by two distinguished figures of the theater whose names never before have been associated with this type of theatrical enterprise. One is Guy Robertson; the other Claire Luce. Neither is unknown to Washington audiences. Neither is either of them known to local theatergoers in vehicles other than those relying primarily upon music for their appeal. Mr. Robertson and Miss Luce, as dramatic stars, will be a new experience.

Adventure in a New Field

THIS IS NOT at all to say that we mistrust their talents in a field which, one dares to say, must be as new to them as it will be to those who observe them across the footlights. It is merely to go on record that we anticipate another of the thrills that spring eternally from the theater's versatility.

It might be noted at this point that Mr. Robertson's emergence from the highly colored roles he has played upon the musical stage into the more stark precincts of tragic drama has not been too sudden. To be sure, Mr. Robertson sang and played the role of Johann Strauss in that fabulous production of "The Great Waltz" something like 1,200 consecutive times, but always in the back of his mind was the notion that dramatic roles really were his metier. He seems to have had little difficulty in convincing Producer Sam H. Harris that there was a substantial foundation for his confidence; or George S. Kaufman, the director of "Of Mice and Men," either, for that matter. For there he is.

Mr. Robertson, it may be said, comes by his histrionic ability honestly. His mother was a star of the theater and his father a director. The only thing that seems to have impeded him as a leading exponent of the more serious forms of drama is the possession of too fine a voice to be ignored.

There are vague implications of a ranch in Colorado, where Mr. Robertson became acquainted with the sort of "bindle-stiffs" he is called upon to impersonate in "Of Mice and Men" and there are further suggestions that physically he is completely equipped for the role. These are merely floating about. It seems that he drinks gallons of milk a day, smokes moderately, savors a cocktail when he feels like it, stands 5 feet 10½ inches tall and weighs 170 pounds. If anyone happens to be concerned, he is reported to have azure blue eyes. He also is said to bear a striking resemblance to James Cagney, to which, knowing them both, I am totally unable to subscribe.

Mr. Robertson's first ambition was to become an engineer, but the Great War came about and he found himself in the aviation corps, instead. When that unmeasurable holocaust was over, he developed a yearning for the theater which was appeased by a professional debut in "Head Over Heels," in 1919. He still is an ardent advocate of the airlines, flying at every opportunity, smokes any kind of cigaret offered him and has a passion for football.

There seems to be no definite reason why that sort of man should be confined to the saccharine romanticisms of musical comedy and operetta.

The Blonde Miss Luce Becomes Actress

THE BLONDE and enchanting Miss Luce, I believe, is not experiencing her first adventure in serious drama in the principal feminine role of "Of Mice and Men," although her chief reputation may be said to lie in an earlier field of musical endeavor, with which the late Florenz Ziegfeld had something of a hand.

Miss Luce's major contribution to her current vehicle is reputed to be an uncanny ability to "play dead." As the blonde manhunter in the powerful Steinbeck play, Miss Luce is choked to death by the giant ranch hand, Lennie. For more than 10 minutes, so one hears, she lies in full view of the audience without a muscular twitch or sign of breathing. This in itself is a bit of an accomplishment, without regard to the exercise of the seductive wiles that may have led to the choking.

The trio of principals in the National's new offering is completed by Lester Damon. Mr. Damon is possessed of a happy facility in the matter of impersonating unlovely characters who entirely belie his own natural inclinations. An educated gentleman and graduate of Brown University, Mr. Damon was born in Providence—thus sharing eminence with George M. Cohan, foremost gentleman of the American theater—where his family was, and is, one of the most aristocratic to be found in the State of Rhode Island.

After finishing college, Mr. Damon visited relatives in England and, surrendering to that inevitable urge toward the theater, finally found himself engaged for a year of "bits" and minor roles at Old Vic's, in London. From Old Vic's practically anything in the theater is possible. So he went on from there. It was he who stepped into the role of "Baby Face" Martin in "Dead End," when Joe Downey relinquished the part to accept Hollywood's golden offers. Mr. Damon, therefore, is a close friend of those incorrigible hoodlums, the "Dead End Kids," which is all I can think of, at the moment, that I have against him!

Maurice Evans Takes Typewriter in Hand

DESPITE THE FACT that Mr. Richard Watts, jr., my remote colleague on the New York Herald-Tribune, deals with some comprehensiveness and finality on the matter of Mr. Evans' Falstaff in "Henry IV," Part One, I still feel impelled to reproduce herewith the letter I received from Maurice Evans only a few days ago—under date of January 26, to be exact.

Dear Nelson Bell: So many people have written from all over the country asking for information about my activities that I feel a

Broadway Is On Qui Vive For New Hits

February Holds Rich Promise of Plays to Swell Robust Season

By Herbert Drake

New York, Feb. 4.

If the month of December was more than unkind to the theater, developing no new hits at all, the month of January came to the rescue with at least two of those heavenly events and gave birth to five successes besides on Broadway.

There seem to be 24 shows current, and none of those are definite hits, in a slightly generous application of the term, and of the rest, most are comfortable successes, making the general picture of business a cheerful one. The month of January, with its 12 plays, brought the total produced so far to 65. February promises nine and hints at two more than that, as follows:

The Theater Guild will throw out the first play Friday night with an English adaptation of Stefan Zweig's notion of how the story of "Jeremiah" should be told in dramatic terms.

Two Shrinking Violets

Saturday night two hitherto shy theater workers will blossom out as producers with an intimate musical show called "One for the Money." They are Stanley Gilky and Gertrude Guthrie McClintic and Katharine Cornell. Their initial producing venture is by Nancy Hamilton and Morgan Lewis and will have Miss Hamilton in a prominent acting part.

The 7th has been set aside for "I Must Love Someone," a history of the Floradora Sextette by Leyla, Georgie and Battling Jack Kirkland.

The 8th is claimed by George Abbott for a character comedy he likes called "Mrs. O'Brien Entertains." He will install it in the Lyceum Theater with a cast including Margaret Mullen, Harry Shannon, Marie Brown, James C. Lane, Walter Kinselle and Katherine Meskill.

On the 9th Dwight Deere Wiman will present his second musical of the season, "Stars in Your Eyes," at the Majestic Theater. It has a book by J. P. McEvoy, lyrics by Dorothy Fields and music by Arthur Schwartz.

Miss Larrimore Returns

The possible opening for the week is "What Every Woman Wants," a number by Saxon Kling and Esther Forbes, which the Shuberts are now exercising on the road.

The week of the 13th holds one date and one promise. Herman Shumlin will do a Lillian Hellman play, "The Little Foxes," on the 15th at the National Theater with the celebrated Tallulah Bankhead in the role of a member of the Southern aristocracy.

The promise for the week of the 13th if "Off to Buffalo," a farce comedy about the accidental return of vaudeville by Max Liebman and Allen Boretz. Vinton Freedley and Albert Lewis will offer it at the Longacre Theater.

The week of the 20th will bring "Miss Swan Expects," a comedy by Sam and Bella Spewack to the Bijou Theater.

The two plays still unmentioned are the two possibilities. One, "My Dear Children," will bring John Barrymore back to the footlights, accompanied by Elaine Barrie.

SCREEN AND STAGE STARS OF THE WEEK
At top, Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen and Douglas Fairbanks, jr., in the stellar roles in "Gunga Din," now on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater. Above, Claire Luce, cast in the principal feminine role in John Steinbeck's play of "Of Mice and Men," opening in the National Theater tomorrow night—an artist's impression

Jim Rowe now has succeeded to all of James Roosevelt's tasks as secretary to the President . . . Gus Schilling, who stepped from being a Minsky comic into a role with the Mercury Theater's new Shakespearean production, has asked Orson Welles to find room for his wife—who strip-teases at the Eltinge Theater . . . Harper's will publish Spivy's new song, "Why Don't You," which ridicules its "Why Don't You" department . . . Clifton Webb heard the tune and the line: "Why don't you throw Clifton Webb over your shoulder and make a wish?" . . . "Madame," said Webb, "I feel complimented."

Dominick Guariglia always wanted to wear a tuxedo . . . That was the dream he dreamed in the slums where he was born and reared . . . He stole to try and achieve that ambition . . . And at 17 he killed Detective Michael J. Foley during a holdup . . . Dominick was caught, convicted and was one of the three boys executed last Thursday at Sing Sing . . . He was buried from a funeral parlor at 161 Degraw street, Brooklyn . . . Clemente Giglio, of the Italian theaters, paid for that funeral as well as for Dominick's burial suit—his first brandnew tuxedo.

During each performance of the Federal Theater's "Pinocchio" the man who portrays the leading role is perplexed when approached by the two beggar women onstage, and pleads from the footlights to the audience: "What shall I do? FASHION ACADEMY: Gen. Robert Wood, head of Sears, Roebuck, has made it his proudest boast that he purchases all his clothing directly from the racks of the company over which he presides . . . And so when he and Mrs. Wood were invited to attend a dinner at the White House the general pursued his custom and attired himself in the raiment featured among his company's wares . . . After the dinner, where he dined with the President of the United States and the First Lady, Gen. Wood retired to his hotel room, pleased because a Sears, Roebuck full dress suit had been worn at a White House function . . . "Well," he asked his wife, "wasn't it perfect?" . . . "Your full dress suit was all right," Mrs. Wood replied, "but your tie wasn't" . . . "What's wrong with it?" the general demanded . . . "Nothing," the lady informed, "—except that it's black!"

BOOK DEPARTMENT: Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the retired Attorney General, will write a series of articles about her experiences in Washington . . . Mrs. Cummings, who has been the Capital's wittiest lady, will start with: "If you think it's tough getting into the Cabinet, try getting out."

Sealskin Coats Not So Costly As Single Seal

Slicker, Hollywood Star, Earns High Salary and Wallows in Luxury

By Melrose Gower

Hollywood, Feb. 4.

Niggardly is not the word to describe the cost of maintaining a sealion in the movies.

We dont' mean just any old sealion. We mean Slicker, the Gable of Sealdom, the sleek and handsome dual-flippered mammal that left his placid home in the Pacific to joust successfully for cinematic honors.

The daily tariff for maintaining Slicker in a style to which he never was accustomed before he went Hollywood is, your correspondent learned this past week, terrific.

It comes to the tidy little sum of $625 per day!

Perhaps you think this is a fish story. Unfortunately for the gentleman producing Bobby Breen's current film, "Fisherman's Wharf," in which Slicker enacts a featured role, along with Leo Carrillo and Henry Armetta, it is no fish fantasy. It is the gospel truth. Also, according to the gentleman, it is well worth the cost to transfer Slicker's fine aquatic figure to celluloid.

Highest Paid Animal

Slicker's salary, highest ever paid an animal in Hollywood, is $1,000 per week. And to that his daily fresh salmon consumption of $10.75 a day, the cost of two trainers at $20 a day, rental of a tank automobile with fresh running water at $50 a day, and the surface is still only scratched.

The sealion, like other famous movie celebrities, must have a stand-in. For this, an ambitious young seal named Curley is employed at a salary of $30 a day. Curley, too, must have a trainer, which is $10 a day additional. Also, Curley must eat.

Then the matter of cost of location transportion must be added. For the film company's hegira to the real Fisherman's Wharf, in San Francisco, where most of the picture was photographed, a special railroad car with tank and circulating water, was rented from the Pullman Co. The railroad officials were funny about this item. They refused to allow Slicker to ride in the regular baggage coach unless they could disclaim responsibility for any injuries he might suffer en route.

That is not all. Your correspondent does not wish to forget the salaried attendant of the S. P. C. A. who was ever present on the set of "Fisherman's Wharf" while Slicker was emoting before the cameras.

Case of Poetic Justice

To Owner Winston there is poetic justice in Slicker's fat film earnings. For nearly four years Winston and Slicker starved it out at the California seacoast town of Monterey, patiently waiting for the day when vaudeville would stage a comeback. As time passed he had to part with his equipment and all his seals but Slicker. He and Slicker were going to fight out their personal depression together even, as Winston says, "Though I had to learn to like mackerel."

Owner Winston smiles happily today as Slicker's fame mounts higher in Hollywood.

A Few Words About Falstaff and Maurice Evans

Even among some of his admirers there has been the suspicion that Maurice Evans was a serious minded actor, given to dramatic gravity rather than to the lighter touch. It was their fear that humorous playing would find him out of his depth, indulging in displays of frolicsome pedantry that would remind one of the schoolmaster on a lark.

Fortunately for us romantics, the skeptics are sometimes confuted in this world. Now Mr. Evans has shown us his Falstaff in Miss Margaret Webster's beautifully imagined production of "Henry IV," part I, and all of the suspicions of the doubters have been handsomely put to rout.

The Maurice Evans Falstaff is not merely a satisfactory hurdling of a difficult task. It is one of the most brilliant acting achievements of the modern theater, set down in one of the finest of modern Shakespearean productions and bringing to superbly humorous life one of the great comic figures of literature.

Of Captains and Kings

Although "Henry IV" is a chronicle of captains and kings, taking its royalty with high and pariotic seriousness, it is one of the most devastating blows ever struck against the lofty dignity of divine majesty. With earnest mien, it starts out to contemplate the clan feuds of merrie England, the development of young Prince Hal from rake to ruler, the conflict in character between the impetuous Hotspur and the crafty son of Bolingbroke, and other problems of the classes born to rule. Then something happens. Into the narrative there lumbers a great, corpulent fellow, vast of stomach and imagination, by name Sir John Falstaff.

He is a lamentable person indeed, a braggart, a lecher, a lover of strong drink and dubious women, a mocker at all the bautiful traditions of chivalry and heroism, a shameless debaucher of youth.

Yet once this bawdy, lusty, broken-down old knight has arrived in the midst of the alarums and excursions, we care no longer who rules over England, nor can we regard the activities of the kings and the kingmakers as anything more than an unwelcome interruption of Sir John's latest drinking bout.

Why should this deplorable old fellow, this worthless reprobate, seem so splendid a figure that he makes such comparatively estimable gentlemen as King Henry, the Prince of Wales and Sir Henry Miller, the valiant Hotspur, but ministers to his humor? No doubt it is in great part due to the essential perversity of man, which invariably causes him to side in his heart with the reprobate as against the grave and worthy man of dignity.

But Falstaff has a place in our affections over and beyond any such general law of human behavior. We love him because there is something so warm and richly human about him, because of the great sense of the joy and gayety that should be life which wells up within him, because of his great humorous contempt for the stuffy conventions of a hpyocritical moral code.

Knights talked in fine, rounded periods, and then indulged in actions that would shame the lowly fellows that they sneered upon.

Such use of noble terms for contemptible deeds has not, heaven knows, decreased with the years, and when Sir John Falstaff, with his roaring laugh, his comic imagination and his unashamed realism, cuts through the trappings of this outmoded chivalry, this false heroism, this fake loyalty, he delights us by his destruction of fatuous myths.

Falstaff's Cowardice

Next to the problem of Hamlet's madness, I suppose there is no Shakespearean matter more thoroughly gone into than Falstaff's cowardice. Hamlet was not mad, save in so far as the subtlety of his questing intellect suggested madness to him, but, in the same degree, Falstaff was not a coward, save as his practical sense of the reality of things gave him no illusions about heroism.

He valued his life because life to him was fun and he could see no particular point in losing it. In him Shakespeare scores his greatest point against the oratorical nonsense that men live and die by. And it is not the least of Falstaff's glories that he was the W. C. Fields of his robust day.

Even though Falstaff does capture "Henry IV," the performance never becomes a one-man show. There are at least three unusually good portrayals by supporting actors: Wesley Addy's Hotspur, Edmond O'Brien's Prince Hal and Henry Edward's King Henry.

As, for Miss Webster, after her brilliant direction of this difficult work, I suspect her of being the first lady of the theater.

Hedda Hopper

On the Ingratitude of Those Who Have Waxed Fat

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 4.—"I'm going back to Broadway, or London, or Pairs, or Berlin!" I've heard that cry for 15 years, and the other day I just got fed up when a second-rate actor, who has come out here and made a fortune, and had Hollywood practically thrown in his lap, again made the threat.

Let's take a look at some of these people Hollywood has glorified and built up from nothing. We've allowed them to become dictators, choose their own stories, directors, cast and even which side of the face must be photographed—there might be a mole on the other side. You should see how still pictures are retouched so that every line of expression is removed. No candid camera shots must go out without their personal okay. No line of publicity unless they read it first.

And what do they get on Broadway? They usually stooge for some well-known stage figure in a minor part, and after four to six weeks they're are at liberty again. Then the whining, and the finagling starts all over again—how to get back to Hollywood (with dignity) and at more money then they got before.

Hollywood's here to stay, giving entertainment for the people and by the people.

And no one single individual is going to stop the cogs going around for one single, solitary moment.

Let's take our little firebrand, Lupe Velez. When she arrived from Mexico some years ao, she was a different personality. Just a fun-loving child of nature. Well, films built her up into a tremendous name —everything she did was news. Why, once she bit a horse and got a headline! She did all right until the novelty wore off. This season again she started her shenanigans in a play called "You Never Know." But the show wasn't so hot, and they wanted everyone to take a cut. Not Lupe. She'd go right back to Mexico and make pictures. When they said, "O. K., go!" she took the cut, but even that didn't save it—the show closed.

And then she opened with Billy Rose in the same old act she used in "Strike Me Pink," doing imitations of her friends, the stars. But little Billy Rose, who isn't afraid of anybody, said, "Listen, baby—the customers are tired of that. You'll have to change your routine." And so she settled down to some good hard work, and did.

Take the case of Franchot Tone, who was a swell actor in "Success Story." Well, Hollywood built him up into star billing. And his marriage with Jean Crawford didn't hurt him any. Now he's back home, playing in a melodramatic little whimsey, dealing with racketeering and motorboat life. And playing opposite him is another one of our discontented stars, Sylvia Sidney, to whom Hollywood gave almost a million dollars.

I take my hat off to Freddie March, who poured his own money into a play last winter which brought forth not only bad notices, but gave the New York critics a Roman holiday at his expense. But he cracked right back and now is making a phenomenal success in "The American Way."

Ann Harding was another whose art Hollywood was stifling. So what? She makes a very bad picture in England, does a revival of "Candida," puts it on out here and what does it do? Well—a nose dive is putting it mildly. Which reminds me

George Abbott Offers Another Play of Youth

'What a Life,' Coming To National, Latest Hit Of Comedy Producer

George Abbott upset a precedent in New York last summer by giving up a much needed vacation in order to direct personally the rehearsals of his touring troupe of "What a Life," the hilarious Broadway comedy which comes to the National Theater on Monday night, February 13. The play is described as a delightful associate of "Brother Rat," the Abbott laugh hit which scored such a success here last season.

"I wanted to be sure," he states, "that the road company equaled the performance of the New York company in every way, so I kept an eye on it myself. I think the results were pleasing, for the cast is just about perfect. Certainly the Broadway cast, which has been playing for two seasons at the Biltmore Theater, is no better."

Mr. Abbott is one of the few top-flight producers who direct their own shows, and this season he has inaugurated a policy of handling all road companies himself, rather than turning them over to his production staff. In addition, he requires every player to see service in the Broadway cast of a play before taking to the road.

"What a Life," a youthful comedy written by Clifford Goldsmith and dealing with the hilarious antics of a mal-adjusted high school boy, was selected by Burns Mantle as one of the ten best plays of the season. It holds no brief except for the pleasure of the audience, and New York critics have called it a high spot in the cycle of Abbott comedies, including "Three Men on a Horse," "Boy Meets Girl," and "Room Service," in addition to "Brother Rat."

'Washington Merry-Go-Round' Continues Next Week

Throughout Leon Pearson's new play, "Washington Merry-Go-Round," there is much talk about dictators. This is inevitable, since the play is a realistic picture of contemporary life in Washington. All of the characters talk like all of the people who live here; and, since there is more or less constant discussion of dictatorships going on in Washington, there is constant reference to the subject in the play.

As in real life, there are many people in the play who voice the opinion that we already have a dictatorship in this country. But the very fact that the Civic Theater, our own local theater composed entirely of Washingtonians, is producing a play by a Washingtonian (Mr. Pearson is a newspaper correspondent) here in Washington, and that the play is about Washington, with its cast full of Representatives and other governmental people, is proof positive that there is no dictatorship in this country.

And so, certainly we have no dictatorship of the stage, because the Civic Theater will continue its production of "Washington Merry-Go-Round" through next week at the Wardman Park Theater.

general statement of my plans may be of interest at this particular season of the year. It is very flattering to know that we made so many friends in the cities which we visited with "Richard II," and I feel I owe them an explanation as to why we cannot revisit them this year with my production of "Hamlet."

"Hamlet" terminated its run on January 21 after having played a total of 98 performances. The production played to about 125,000 people and grossed approximately $250,000. This was all the more remarkable because it was predicted that not only had New York had its fill of "Hamlet" in two recent productions, but that it was impertinent to expect civilized theater-goers to forego their cocktails and their dinners in order to arrive at the theater in time for the 6:30 curtain which the performance of the full length text demands.

Even the granting of an hour's supper intermission only succeeded in eliciting wisecracks from some of the gentlemen of the press about competitive bidding for the bicarbonate concession!

The ladies and gentlemen of the public confirmed our belief in Mr. Shakespeare's complete script by virtually ignoring the one short version of the play which we performed every Saturday night. The same public which had previously complained that even the abridged text of "Hamlet" was too long, now felt it was not getting its money's worth unless we gave them "the works," at all performances. Although this involved doing what I then thought was impossible—playing two five-hour performances every Saturday—we had no option but to take a deep breath and do the public's bidding.

King Claudius, Queen Gertrude and the Prince of Denmark and their court could be seen punching the clock at the St. James Theater any Saturday about noon and at intervals during the succeeding 12 hours whipping up refreshments on electric grills in their dressing rooms.

It was always a matter for speculation as to whether I, personally, would be seen walking out of the theater at midnight or being borne therefrom on a stretcher, but fortunately, all of my exits were vertical.

Retains Important Players in Leads

The elaborate nature of the production and the peculiar conditions imposed upon it by the length of the performance puts the idea of touring "Hamlet" beyond the bounds of practicability, but it is my hope some time in the future to take a modified production on the road, and play it in repertoire with other plays.

I shall always be grateful for the experience of last year's tour for having provided me with the opportunity of experimenting and obtaining the indorsement of local audiences for my new production of Shakespeare's historical comedy "Henry IV." So encouraging were the audiences in Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis and Toronto, that we have decided to invest the play with new scenery and costumes—make certain changes of cast—and to present it on Broadway.

Miss Mady Christians, who played Queen Gertrude in "Hamlet" will play Lady Percy—wife to Hotspur. Mr. Henry Edwards, whom I brought over from England, to play King Claudius in my production of "Hamlet" will assume the title role of Henry IV. Mr. Wesley Addy, who was so well liked as Hotspur in last season's try-out, will continue in that part and the rest of the cast will be drawn from my permanent acting company.

Following "Henry IV" we may be compelled to revive "Richard II" for a few weeks in response to the insistent demands of many of our patrons; thereafter, coinciding with the commencement of the World's Fair, it is my hope to repeat performances of all three plays on a repertory basis for the benefit of visitors from out of town.

So, although we cannot get around to calling upon your city this season, we feel that a goodly number of your residents may do us the courtesy of paying us a visit on our home ground, and hope we may be able to send them away with a report of something definitely accomplished, and a promise of good things to come.

A Happy New Year to you and a hope that we may spend part of it together. Yours sincerely,

(Signed) MAURICE EVANS.

There still ought to be some way, it seems to me, to impel Mr. Evans to change his mind, insofar as a Washington engagement in "Hamlet" is concerned. But probably not.

Those Who Have Waxed Fat

of the time she went into hysterics when George Bernard Shaw handed her a minor criticism about her playing the part.

Ruth Chatterton is another who did a swell job as long as everything was going her way, and she was getting that $8,500 a week. But she was very upset at being offered an unpleasant part in her last picture, "Dodsworth." So she hied herself to England and we haven't heard much from her since except that I believe she's arrived in New York to do "Farewell Performance," which I understand ran one week in London with Mary Ellis, another of our discontents.

And our English cousins are not above a mild complaint here and there. I remember a couple of years ago, when I was in London, and Leslie Howard arrived back from America, after having spent months playing Romeo. He gave forth an interview saying how his art had been stifled. But their own critics over there aren't as kind as we are. Mr. Agate, one of their more courageous ones, came out without mincing matters and told the world just what he thought of Mr. Howard's Romeo, and his ingratitude. Oliver Messel, who did the costumes for that picture, sold the original sketches and got an enormous price for them. But here, our sketches belong to the studio.

But we're so afraid we might hurt the gentle darlings' feelings. So we don't say anything. In fact, we scarcely comment on the fact that but for the publicity Mr. Howard got in America he might not have been selected to play on "Pygmalion" or he might not now be receiving $7,500 a week for 12 weeks, to do Ashley in "GWTW."

Ann at Gayety

Ann Corio, who needs no introduction to Washington audiences, will be the star of the new burlesque production opening at the Gayety Theater this afternoon. On the program with the titian-haired charmer will be Mike Sachs and his partner, Alice Kennedy. Benny Moore and a large company of Gayety favorites complete the cast, supported by a beauty chorus of vivacious and talented young women.

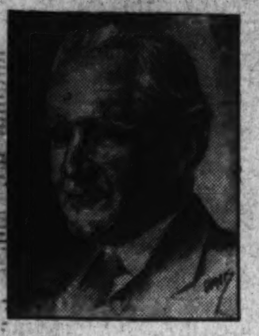
Substitute for Chanteys Lightens Dock Labors

Great Music, However, Should Never Be Made Commonplace Through Repetition And Inattentive Listening

By Ray C. B. Brown.

With mingled astonishment and amusement I read last Sunday in the New York Times a reporter's story to the effect that the labors of longshoremen and other dock workers on Pier 30 in Brooklyn are being lightened on a night-and-day schedule by a musical reproducing system installed by the Isbrandtsen-Moller Company, steamship operators. This substitute for the old-fashioned chanteys is not, according to the reporter, a device to speed up work, but a philanthropic attempt to combine entertainment with drudgery. On the principle that rhythm is a stimulant, there would seem to be a practical basis for the innovation, yet one wonders what the effect would be upon the world at large if all our activities were conditioned by music.



RAY C. B. BROWN.

"The system was installed last week," reads the account, "and on Thursday afternoon the first program came sweetly over a leased wire from the control room of Muzak Corporation, the Manhattan purveyor of pipe-line tunes to restaurants, clubs and hotels. Not that the pier force was failing to get the most out of its laborers, said H. J. Isbrandtsen, head of the concern, and his young son, Walter, also active in the company. They decided that on their pier the tasks would at least be happier with the soothing strains floating down the long reaches, amid the exotic odors of spices from the Orient, acrid leathers, rubber and other cargoes.

"Joseph D. R. Freed, vice president and general manager of Muzak Corporation, also felt that a heavy bag of coffee would assume a new aura of romance in an atmosphere charged with ebullient melodies urging the workers on. He said that the music, from recordings made specially by his company, would be planned for the particular needs of the workers who will hear it. This is all done, he said, by the concern's program department, which knows the psychological time for 'lift' music and other categories fit for a worker's wandering emotions.

"Neither Mr. Freed nor Mr. Isbrandtsen had visited the waterfront's new center of culture since the installation, but they said that reports came in regularly, and that all the stevedores, loaders, checkers and members of the pier office force were happy." There the story ends, leaving us uninformed about the different effects on work-tempo produced by an aria from grand opera and the Dead March from "Saul."

Until further bulletins are issued, we will not know whether Beethoven's seventh symphony makes the men move faster than does a divertimento by Mozart.

It is highly improbable, however, that the music "piped" to the pier will be other than light and popular—the kind of music composed expressly for entertainment and for dancing. If it is not that kind, it should be, for there is a grave danger in using the wrong kind of music as a mere accompaniment to our activities either physical or mental. Music serves all our moods since it expresses all the moods of all composers who create it, and when we use music as a stimulant, we should be careful in our choice. Music of a high spiritual content cannot with impunity be used for mere entertainment, and to the extent that it is thus used, it loses its value for us.

When we speak of great music, we usually mean music which has stood the test of time by virtue of its inherent power, music which was so intensely imbued by its composer with a meaning for his fellow-men that its vitality in unimpaired, music that is an emotional record of real life. When we listen to great music, we must prepare ourselves for its reception, because great music was not meant for an idle moment. If great music is idly heard at any and all times, without mental attention, without the effort to understand its meaning, it is likely to cease being great music as far as we are concerned.

While we all recognize that music is an art, too many of us fail to realize that listening to music is also an art. Proficiency in art is reached by arduous and unremitting practice, and the only way to learn the art of listening is by practicing it. The study of so-called music appreciation too often diverts our minds from the life of music itself to its anatomy, its history and anecdotes about its composers. Music lives not while we are studying about it, but while we are listening to it with the keenest attention. The greater the music, the more effort we have to make to understand it.

'Bach Goes to Town' Proves Popular in Recording Disc

Whether It's Bach, or Just Bach-Like, It's Smart Swing;So Is the All-Star 'Blues;' Noel Coward's Sophisticated 'Stately Homes of England' Is Fun

By Jay Walz.

I don't know if it is really Bach, or just after Bach. But in a currently popular disk (Victor's 26130), Benny Goodman's men got pretty urban themselves doing a number called "Bach Goes to Town." The theme they start out on does sound like Bach, and it may be Bach. And the fugal development of that theme might be Bach, too—almost. There's just a shade of difference here between orthodox Bach and Benny—and even the shading is subtly drawn. So, even if the results are definitely swing, I cannot see how the most respectable of Bachians can fail to enjoy the fun of it. The arrangement is Alec Templeton's. The number is from his "Topsy Turvy Suite."

The old-time favorite, "Whispering," is on the other side. The Goodman gang doesn't do so much more with it than Paul Whiteman's band did about 15 years ago.

"It's a Lonely Trail" (Victor, 26131) gives Larry Clinton's orchestra a good stretch in the groove. What's more important probably is the chorus it gives Bea Wain. "I Go for That," from "St. Louis Blues," with Fred Leary singing, is on the other side.

Certain of those who've heard it say that "The Stately Homes of England" from Noel Coward's "Set to Music" is the best thing that's come along since "Mad Dogs and Englishmen." They refer, I think, to the good-humored, nipping satire on the British so abundant in each. These people, who, I think, have something, will want to know about Victor disc 26147, one side of which is devoted to several stanzas of the hit.

As on the stage, the singing is done by a quartet of sophisticated young lords, and the recorded version is identical with that which we heard recently at the National Theater. The singers are Hugh French, Ross Landon, John Gatrell and Kenneth Carten; their orchestra, His Majesty's Theater Orchestra, directed by Ben Frankel, all of London. The recording, incidentally, was made over there.

"Mad About the Boy," one of "Set to Music's" catch tunes, is on the other side of this disc. Ray Noble and his orchestra do just about everything with the song, except give you the words—there is no singing. What they do principally is to dress it up with symphonic effects until it is almost as impressive, and as irresistible, as "Night and Day."

Jitterbugs, I imagine, will be even more mad about the performances of the All-Star band on Disc 26144 (also Victor's). The numbers are "Blue Lou" and just "The Blues." The names of Benny Goodman and Tommy Dorsey stand out prominently in the list of bandsmen, but no less pleasing to throngs of admirers is the presence of a dozen of other notable swing names: Shertzer E. Miller, Rollini, Spivak, Berigan and Sonny Dunham, trumpeters; Teagarden, who aids Mastren, B. Haggart, Bob Zurke, Bauduc. If you can choose "Blue Lou" over "The Blues," or vice versa, you're a better man than I am.

These Artists Take Musical Spotlight

Bentonelli, Monroe to Sing In Opera Here

Metropolitan Artists To Be Co-starred in 'Manon' on Feb. 16

Lucy Monroe and Joseph Bentonelli, two of the Metropolitan Opera Company's young American artists, will be co-starred in Massenet's "Manon" in Constitution Hall on Thursday evening, February 16. Smetana's "The Bartered Bride," Puccini's "La Boheme" and Wagner's "Lohengrin" will be given consecutively the evenings of February 13, 14 and 15.

Bentonelli's debut at the Metropolitan was made in January of 1936, when, without orchestral rehearsal, he substituted for the leading tenor in "Manon" and achieved a marked success. Previous to this he had sung at the Royal Opera in Rome, alternating with Beniamino Gigli. He took part in the premieres of Refice's "Cecilia" in Trieste and Smareglia's "Il Vassallo" in Rome. His outstanding American engagements have included the leading tenor roles in the first American performances of Gluck's "Iphigenie en Aulide" and Respighi's "La Fiamma."

Lucy Monroe began her career in musical comedy, from which she turned to radio work, appearing as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra in a commercial hour. She sang Musetta to Lucrezia Bori's Mimi in the performance of "La Boheme," which opened the St. Louis Municipal Opera a few years ago. She has been with the Metropolitan for one year.

In "Manon," Francis Row, Hungarian barytone recently arrived in New York, will take the role of Lescaut. Francis Barnard, young American basso, will be the Count des Grieux, and Lodovico Oilviero will be Guillot. Minor roles will be sung by two resident singers, Clelia Fioravanti and Evangeline Tully.

Artists featured in other performances include Frederick Jagel and George Rasely, tenors of the Metropolitan; Emma Redell and Margarita Salvi, sopranos of the Chicago Civic Opera, and William Fletcher Smith, barytone, and Berenice Alarie, soprano, from the Chautauqua Summer Opera.

Tickets for the four operas are available at Kitt's, 1330 G street, or at the headquarters of the organization, 1643 Connecticut avenue.

Saint John's Concert

St. John's Church announces the fourth in its series of religious concerts for the evening of February 13. The choir, under the direction of Arthur Howes, will sing Bach's Church Cantata No. 180, "Deck Thyself, My Soul, With Gladness," with Henry E. Kerr at the organ. In addition will be heard the unaccompanied motet for double chorus, "Blessing, Glory and Wisdom and Thanks," which was until recently regarded as the work of Bach, but is now attributed to Gottfried Wagner. The concert is free

Lotte Lehmann And Melchior To Sing Here

Mrs. Townsend to Present "Met" Artists In Recital Tomorrow

At her last musical morning of the season Mrs. Lawrence Townsend will present two Metropolitan Opera artists, Lotte Lehmann and Lauritz Melchior, in a joint recital tomorrow at 11 o'clock in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom. The accompanists are Pavel Ulanovski and Ignaz Strasfogel.

Mme. Lehmann's share of the program will include Schumann's "Widmung" and "Auftraege," Schubert's "Gretchen am Spinnrad" and "Der Erlkoenig," the old English song, "My Lovely Celia;" Richard Hageman's "At the Well," Hugo Wolf's "Verborgenheit," Richard Strauss' "Traum durch die Daemmerung" and Brahms' "Meine Liebe ist gruen."

Mr. Melchior will sing a group of songs in Danish, Finnish and Norwegian—"Majsang" (Lembecke), "Stille mit Hjerte" (Hannikainen), "Fehruar ved Goefen" (Alnaes) and "Hoerer du" (Sverre Jordan—and a group in German—"Mir traeumte von einem Koenigskind" (Richard Trunk), "Lenz" (Hildach), "Schmerzen" and "Traeume" (Wagner).

The two artists will also be heard together in three duets by Schumann—"Ich denke dein," "Er und Sie" and "Unter'm Fenster"—and the finale from the first act of "Die Walkeure."

Dance Troupe To Give Program

Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman will bring their dance troupe to this city for a program on Wednesday evening, February 15, in Roosevelt High School auditorium, under the auspices of the Washington Dance Association. Miss Humphrey will offer a choreographic treatment of Bach's C minor Passacaglia. This is not an "interpretation" of the music, but an abstract dance composition based upon the patterns of the passacaglia and fugue.

Another success of the group's current season is "Race of Life," which is based on James Thurber's drawings and mimes the adventures of a man (Jose Limon), a woman (Doris Humphrey) and a child (Charles Weidman) in pursuit and attainment of "the world's illusion of bubbles." John Martin in the New York Times called it "pure nonsense," and added, "Miss Humphrey has caught the indescribable Thurber sense of comedy."

Other members on the program are "American Holiday," with music by Morris Mamorski; "Opus 51," with music by Vivian Rine, and the trilogy, "New Dance," which is being repeated here by request. Reservations for the evening can be made at the Washington Dance Association, 1742 Church street; the Community Center, Department Thirteenth and K streets; the A. A. A. and the Willard Hotel ticket bureau.

Navy Orchestra to Play

Under direction of Lieut. Charles Benter, the United States Navy Band Orchestra will give a concert Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. in the sail loft at the Navy Yard. The program is as follows: "Rhumba," from Symphony No. 2 (Harold McDonald); overture, dances and march, from "Knaz Igor" (Borodin); "Waldweben," from "Siegfried" (Wagner); "Wein, Wein und Gesang Walzer" (Strauss) and Symphony in D Minor (Franck).

Dorothea Caverli To Sing at Roosevelt

Dorothea Caverli, soprano, will be heard at the regular Sunday evening recital in the Roosevelt Hotel at 9:30 tonight. She will be accompanied by Malton Boyce in the following program:

CAVERLI

"Allerseeien," "Zueignung" and "Morgen" (Richard Strauss), "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair" and "She Never Told Her Love" (Haydn), "O Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me" (Handel), "The Soldier's Bride" and "To the Children" (Rakhmaninov), "Slumber Song" (Grechaninov), "Mah Lindy Lou," "Dreamin' Time" and "Mah L'l Bateau' (Lily Strickland).

Little Symphony Of Michigan U. to Play Here Tuesday

Sponsored by resident alumni, the Little Symphony Orchestra of the University of Michigan, composed of faculty members and graduate students, will give a concert on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Raleigh Hotel. Now in its fifth year, the organization of 16 musicians under the direction of Thor Johnson has played more than 200 converts in Midwestern and Southern cities, and this is its first appearance in the East.

The concert committee of the University of Michigan Alumni Club includes Herman Schmidt, S. P. Hayden, Robert L. Pierce and Ward H. Oehmann. They are selling tickets. The Little Symphony specializes in compositions infrequently heard, and several of them are included in Tuesday's concert. The following program will be given:

Overture to "Joseph" (Mehul), Symphony No. 12 in E major (Haydn), Adagio, Op. 3, "Les fleurs pales de souvenir" (Lekeu), Five Pieces from "For the Children" (Tansman), "Interludium in modo antico" (Glazunov), "Musical Snuff-Box" (Lyadov), "La fille aux cheveux de lin" (Debussy), "Suite in F major (Franck).

Recital Date Set

The fifth event in the concert series sponsored by the Howard University School of Music will be a recital by Charlotte Wallace Murray, contralto, on Tuesday evening, February 14, in Rankin Memorial Chapel. A former resident of Washington, Mrs. Murray has given many successful recitals in various cities.

Dr. Kindler Introduces A Neglected Overture

Lalo Work, He Believes, Should Not Be Overlooked While Acclaim Goes to the "Big Name" Composers; However, Beethoven Is Also Listed for Thursday

With Rosa Ponselle as soloist, the National Symphony Orchestra will give a concert on Thursday evening in Constitution Hall. The program consists of the overture to Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys," Beethoven's eighth symphony; Borodin's "On the Steppes of Central Asia," "Balakirev's Oriental fantasy, "Islamey," and two operatic arias by Miss Ponselle: "Divinites du Styx" from Gluck's "Alceste" and Marietta's Lied from Korngold's "Die tote Stadt." The following comments on the program were written by the orchestra's conductor.

By Dr. Hans Kindler.

Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys" .... Lalo

Music, more than any other art, has been influenced by "big names" and nineteenth and twentieth century publicity. We all are likely to shout "Brahms, Wagner, Strauss, Stravinsky" as we would use the names of any well-advertised article. This matters little as long as it does not blind us to the merits of of maybe less great but often very fine and occasionally exquisite creators.

Among these latter belongs Lalo. His output was small, but of great distinction and of perfect workmanship. His best known work is probably the "Symphonie Espagnole" for violin and orchestra. But his Conberto in F for the same instrument, the cello concerto, the ballet "Namouna," some of his chamber music and the opera "Le Roi d'Ys," of which we are playing the overture today, are certainly equally worthy of the renown which they have won in Europe but not in America.

It will be my endeavor to remain as catholic in the selection of my programs as my conviction permits and to play, besides the acknowledged masters, constantly the best works of the lesser known and often wrongfully "shelved" composers of smaller but sometimes even more finely tempered and moving talent.

The overture of today is somber in character and of definitely symphonic grandeur, with strongly contrasting lyrical episodes such as, at first, the clarinet solo, then fanfare-like passages, followed by the splendidly somber main theme of the Allegro and, later, the beautiful, tender love song (in solo cello). The entire opera is based on an old Breton legend, somewhat in the nature of Wagner's characters, but the music itself is typically meridional in its warm-blooded mellowness and dramatic intensity.

It is useless for me to say anything about Miss Ponselle. She is world-famous and known to be one of the "stars" of the Metropolitan Opera. Her choice of works for this concert is diversified. In the first half she will remain in the classic frame, singing "Divinites du Styx," from the opera "Alceste," by Gluck. In the second half she will sing a number of contrasting songs, among them Marietta's Lied, from "The Dead City," by the modern and highly successful Viennese composer, Erich Wolfgang Korngold.

"Symphony No. 8" ..... Beethoven

The "Eighth Symphony" was one of Beethoven's favorites. In fact, he preferred it to the immortal "Seventh," strange as this may seem. He even called it "much the better one" of the two. I think the reason of this fondness was because he wrote it in order to forget the despair into which illness, poverty, and family troubles at the time had plunged him. It certainly has the feeling of a determined effort on the part of the composer to have done with his misery. It was written at the time of his worst troubles with his brother, Johann, whose marriage to a rather notorious lady of the times (Beethoven called her the "Queen of the Night") upset Beethoven terribly. His own illness had taken him to Telplitz for some bathing treatments; thence to Lenz (where Johann lived), and where the symphony was written.

There is a strain of sardonic humor throughout this symphony. It starts off immediately on this nearly harsh vein. The development section emphasizes this still more, with its basic octaves and the quasi-careless throwing about of the main theme from one section of the orchestra to another. After the climax and the recapitulation, the coda is wilder still, and the movement, after three forte chords, ends as abruptly as it has started; in fact,

Modern Art Gallery Shows Work of Parisian Painters

'Air-Less Quality Is Pronounced in the Cosmopolitan Group On Display Here

By Alice Graeme.

An exhibition of Paris paintings of today has been assembled by the Museum of Modern Art Gallery for a third showing of this season. It is an ambitious task to attempt to present, in a single exhibition, a cross-section of contemporary work of the many painters of different nationalities now in Paris. With the co-operation, however, of the Societe de l'Art Present, a French organization whose aim is to bring living artists into more direct contact with the public, the committee of the museum has arranged the current showing. A large group of pictures, never before exhibited in this country, has been sent direct from Paris, and many others have been loaned from dealers and American private collections.

The exhibition, though necessarily far from comprehensive, does contain samples of widely diversified expression. No one style emerges as predominant from the showing. There are the realists, the surrealists and the primitives; and there are painters who represent the decorative, the nostalgic, and the coldly intellectual points of view. The pictures sent from abroad are almost entirely the work of painters who are little known here. The canvases obtained in this country are, for the most part, by artists of more familiar names—Picasso, Matisse, Utrillo, Friesz and others. The show as a whole offers much in the way of contrasts and comparisons between the younger group, less seen here, and the older painters so often exhibiting in New York and elsewhere.

In the last few years much has been done to stimulate interest in French painters. The New York dealers have imported many canvases, both good and bad, and have placed great emphasis on their effort to encourage a market for French art. Yet most of the artists shown have been of the established group, the names that already mean something to the American public. It is much more rare to have the chance to see what the younger men are doing. The present show is noteworthy in that it provides that opportunity, at least in part.

Lack of Air Marked

It is interesting to note among these less familiar painters certain artists who seem to have developed what might be called an air-less painting. Their canvases are as flat and unreal as stage sets, the color is somber and lifeless. They tend to paint an angular, hard surface, and there is little to suggest enjoyment or spontaneity in what they are doing. Georges Rohner's "The Sculptor" shows clearly the manner of this group. The painting is extraordinarily cold and bare. Another such painter is Andre Marchand with his "Les Bergers," an austere landscape, peopled by figures in strangely frozen attitudes. Marchand, however, has a more sensitive brush than Rohner, as may be seen in his dark and almost delicate "Paysage de Provence." Bob Humblot, Paul Strecker and Claude Venard, with varying degrees of coldness, paint much in the same air-less, somber manner.

Paul Strecker's "La Partie de Balloon," above, is included in the "Paris Paintings of Today" at the Museum of Modern Art

The work of Henri Jannot who also paints in this style, is represented by a large canvas, "The Bathers." Here there is considerably more light, a gayer palette, and a more rhythmic design. The two nudes in the foreground, though stylized, are painted with strength, and the little figure in a striped bathing suit has life and action. Jannot has gone beyond the austerity of the others, and has expressed a certain charm, still with the same flat planes. His forms have a relation to each other which the others of the same manner have not.

Though Jean Balthus has a certain stiffness, and a leaning toward the set, cold manner of Rhoner, Marchand and the others, he has a distinction of his own. Certainly one of the most interesting of the younger French painters, his work at 28 is remarkably able. In his New York exhibition last year he attracted much attention with his striking, realistic portraits. He paints on large canvases, with a rather architectural approach and fine draftsmanship. His portaits of Derain, and of Joan Miro and his daughter, have been particularly admired. In the current exhibition his "Young Girl Resting" combines and almost academic technique with a bold naturalness.

Primitives Represented

In the exhibition of "Masters of Popular Painting" held last winter at the New York Museum of Modern Art, the work of several French modern primitives was greatly admired. Two among these are now included in the present exhibition, Camille Bombois and Jean Eve. Bombois was the son of a French river boatman, and is completely a man of the people. He has been to war, worked hard and painted when he could. His pictures show the painstakingly honest technique of the real primitive. Jean Eve began painting when he was 15. After many vicissitudes he finally found a night job in the Paris toll house, which now leaves him free to paint by day. His "Farmhouse" shown here is executed with remarkable clarity and strength. The Perls Galleries in New York are giving Eve a one-man show this month.

Among the others, the sophisticated and well organized canvas by Maurice Poncelet, "The Ballet Dancer," is of outstanding quality. The work of this artist is practically unknown in this country, but this single painting makes one eager to see more of his work. The imaginative and gayly painted canvas by Pierre Ino, represents the surrealists of today, and in the work of Jean Janin, a Swiss painter, there is the decorative quality of theater design.

After considering a few of the pictures of the younger painters it is interesting to turn again to the more familiar style of Segonzac, Friesz, Vlaminck and the other standard painters. The present exhibition has been able to obtain particularly fine examples of their work The "Paysage," by Vlaminck is unusually compact and vibrant with rich color, and Utrillo's "Le Moulin de la Galette" is a winter landscape of great delicacy. The veteran Othon Friesz is well represented by his "Porte de Toulon," and Segonzac's "Pont de Joinville" shows the richness of his warm paint quality. There is interesting work by both Jean and Raoul Dufy, Matisse and Rouault. In general, the younger, newly imported group has not progressed so far beyond the achievements of the more standard painters. They are exploring many avenues, some of which may well turn out to be dead end. The French tradition has been better served than by what we see of the younger men in the current exhibition of Paris painters.

Cikovsky Exhibition at Whyte Shows Fine Work and Variety

Uneven in Output, Pictures Illustrate Freedom in Experiment

The Whyte Gallery has assembled a group of oils, water colors and pastels by Nicolai Cikovsky, and is presenting the work of this interesting artist in a one-man show, on view until February 16. Cikovsky, born in Poland in 1894, has been in this country since 1923. He is a naturalized citizen and a resident of Washington. For some time Cikovsky taught in St. Paul, Minn., and also at the Cincinnati Art Academy. Over a period of years his painting has been receiving a growing acclaim. He has won frequent medals, including the Logan First Purchase Prize at the Art Institute of Chicago in 1933, and the First Purchase Prize at the Worcester Art Museum, also in the same year. Mrs. Edith Halpert, the discerning director of the Downtown Gallery in New York, has been showing the work of Cikovsky for years. It was in a one-man show there last winter that "Girl in Green" was presented to the public. This fine portrait by Cikovsky was bought in October for the permanent collection of the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

In the current exhibition at the Whyte Gallery there is rather an uneven selection of Cikovsky's work. Some of the water colors and several of the pastels are particularly fine, but the oils are not his best pieces. It would have been greatly to the show's advantage to have added a few of his excellent canvases owned in museum and private collections throughout the country. As it is, the exhibition is unable to present as complimentary or as well-rounded a picture of Cikovsky's work as he deserves.

Uneven in Output

It is surprising how uneven in output Cikovsky is, and in what different moods he chooses to paint. In a way, it is rather encouraging to find a man who can be as flexible and as little set in his point of view. At times he reaches great heights in his paint quality, again he seems to disregard brush work and be more intent on composition. His emphasis varies, and he is not yet arrived at a full synthesis of all his powers. Yet if certain works lack quality or seem harsh, there are others that make up for it handsomely. Freedom of experimentation is healthy, and Cikovsky has at his disposal the essential qualities to develop fine painting.

Most interesting of the oils in his large still life, superb in the sheer brilliance of its paint quality. Despite the fact that the composition is not well knit and a little top-heavy, the painting has great quality alone through the richness of the color harmonies. The softly brushed feathers, the small vase on the round table, the blue cloth in the background are painted with the greatest finesse. In such a canvas as his "Farm Girl" the color range is almost harsh, the blues and reds are flat and lacking in the delicate brush work of the still life. Again in his landscape, "Old Church, Virginia," there is the same stiffness and flat almost posted handling of the color. The figure of a man standing near the mailbox is deftly and easily painted, but the houses in the same canvas are sharp and angular, while the dark blue sky is as unreceding and dead as the wall of a room.

Freedom in Water Colors

In his water colors there is greater freedom, and none of the stiffness sometimes apparent in the oils. Here is a fresh and spontaneous use of the medium. The colors are clear and light, and the line is free and well adapted to the landscape subjects. These papers have an easy and unstudied quality, and show a sensitiveness and sophisticated point of view. A particularly compact and delightful example is "Rockport," done in an abbreviated but convincing manner.

In "Spring Flowers," a study in gouache, Mr. Cikovsky has combined the subtle color and painting of his oils with the freshness of his water colors. One of the most charming pictures in the exhibition, these flowers in a yellow vase against a background of delicious grey are exquisitely painted. A yellow figured tapestry on a table repeats, in its gay colors, the soft colors of the spring flowers. There is a sense of the artist's enjoyment in what he painted, and his pleasure is reflected in the charm and delicacy of the whole delightful composition.

With pastel Cikovsky is again completely at home. There is none of the sloppy technique too often seen in the application of this medium. On the contrary, he uses it with great distinction. In such a drawing as "Girl With a Rose" there is a softness of tone, the quality which pastel, well handled, can render better than other mediums. Other fine pastels are "Interior," an interesting composition with a table before a window and a glimpse of a winter scene beyond, and his dark and rich still life, "Sumac Flowers." In "Desert" he is less successful—doubly so, as this inadequate sketch was the study for a mural panel. On dark papers, Cikovsky has made two other pastels, combined with an ink wash. One of the two, "Chesapeake Bay," has an interesting and diversified composition, while the other, "Willow Tree," is too loose and rather slight. In this comparison there is still another example of Cikovsky's uneven talent.—A. G.

Regional Show at Corcoran Gallery

Jury Awards Popular At Exhibit Marked By Academic Standard

The 1939 exhibition of the Society of Washington Artists, now on view at the Corcoran Gallery of Art, is a regional showing, limited to painters and sculptors from Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

An old society, organized for almost 50 years, the exhibtion is characterized by somewhat academic standards. A most commendable effort has been made, however, to make the exhibition as attractive as possible to younger and progressive artists by inviting an entirely independent and nonpartisan jury of award. This year the jury was composed of Jonas Lie, Henry Varnum Poor, Harry Leith-Ross and Fausta Mengarini Corte.

The award of prizes this year has met with general approval. It is seldom that one has the satisfaction of feeling as much in accord with almost the whole list of a jury's awards. Quality has been sought without deviation to a superficial interest in subject matter. Also the more prosaic and academic works of better established artists have been passed over, in a few of the awards, for the fresher works of younger painters.

Head of Francis Whitman, by Ethel P. Hood, awarded the bronze medal for sculpture by the Society of Washington Artists

Paul Arlt's Painting Best

Paul T. Arlt's "Mohegan Harbor" won the Evening Star's prize of $100 for the best painting in the show. There is a nice relationship in the different grays of the choppy water, the fishermen's shacks and the heavy storm clouds. Mr. Arlt's work has been steadily improving in the last few years till he has developed an individual and rather strong manner.

The society's medal for figure composition (including portraiture) went to Nicolai Cokovsky for his portrait, "Hugh Collins." This canvas is undoubtedly one of the finest pictures in the exhibition. Painted in a rather more realistic manner than usual in Mr. Cikovsky's work, the portrait is extremely vigorous in color and strong in composition. The sitter, Hugh Collins, is a young artist well known in Washington, whose jovial, robust character is in every line of this striking portrait.

Mr. Cikovsky has painted the whole picture as a study in reds and greens. He has posed Mr. Collins in a bright red shirt against a bottle-green background and used the differment gradations of these two colors throughout his canvas. There is boldness in the color and in the pose of the figure, planted squarely in the center of the canvas. This is one of those pictures that just seem to have gone off well—Cikovsky has painted a portrait which is uncannily successful. Richard Lahey, director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, won honorable mention in this group with his delightful "Sketch of Angie."

Coale Landscape Wins

The landscape prize went to Donald Coale, of Baltimore, for his entry, "Grey Morning." Mr. Coale is a young painter whose work has frequently been exhibited here in Washington, particularly at the Phillips Gallery and formerly at Studio House. He is perhaps better known for his small portrait studies than he is for his landscapes. Coale has an agreeable and rather subtle sense of color, painting freely and with imagination.

The jury became interested in two other pictures also in the landscape class and awarded two honorable mentions, one to Mary Louise Cline for "Summer Afternoon" and and the other to Mary Bradley for "Hay Stacks." Miss Cline's painting is a rather clever study, in greens, of a summer thunderstorm. Against the dark background of a green mountain, slanting rain descends upon a hillside cottage. Trees and grasses bend in the wind and there is an effective touch of luminous yellow light appearing just over the mountain. Clothes wildly flapping on a line give added action to this well observed canvas.

Miss Bradley has painted a charming landscape in which both the delicate colors of her light palette and the organization of her sound composition are unusually well sustained. There is a sensitive handling of the silvery light in her clouds and the expressive movement in the branches of the tres. Miss Bradley is a young painter who has seldom exhibited, but this picture marks her as an artist with feeling and ability.

Robert Franklin Gates, who won the medal for still life with his arrangement of ducks and corncobs, is primarily a landscape painter. An instructor at the Phillips Gallery Art School, his work is well known and much favored in Washington. His prizewinning painting has some nice passages but the rather unusual choice of color in the yellow corn on a ground is not altogether happy.

Ethel Hood Takes Medal

Listing Jeanne Begien's "Corms Have Thrips," a greenhouse interior, as a still life, the jury awarded honable mention to this painting. Among the several sculptures of small animals, figures and busts, Ethel P. Hood won the medal with her realistic "Portrait of Francis Whitman."

In addition to the prize list a number of other paintings are of considerable interest and must have run close seconds. Oke Nordgren's "On Long Island" is one of this artist's best landscapes. His color here is more mellow and less harsh than before. The blues and tans of the houses at the edge of an indented shore-line are worked into a sound organization.

Not to be overlooked is Susanne M. Mullett's amusing and gayly painted front yard of a country antique dealer, entitled "Collector's Paradise." Interesting among the portraits are Sybil Bonbright's "Elizabeth;" C. Law Watkins' "Portrait of Michele," and the self-portrait of Andrea Peitro Zerega.

Service Units Meet Friday For Class

Instruction in Mobilization Methods To Be Given

All service units of the local Organized Reserve will gather Friday at headquarters in the Munitions Building for instruction in mobilization procedure, it is announced.

The local reserve troop schools will begin the week's training tomorrow night, when personnel of the 428th Infantry meet in Room 3029 of the Munitions Building to witness a motion picture on "Infantry Hasty Field Fortifications" and "Map Reading."

Tuesday night all infantry units will receive instruction on "Drill—The Rifle Platoon," and signal units "Signal Communications in Meeting Engagement." The latter meeting is at 7:30 in Room 3029. Field Artillery officers will continue their map problem at a meeting on Wednesday night.

With attendance restricted to military intelligence officers, personnel of that branch are to report to Maj. Gwynn Wednesday, at the center door of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh street northwest, for instruction in "Interrogation of Prisoners and Raids."

On Thursday, all engineer units will meet in Room 3614 on the "Engineer Board and Developments in Engineer Equipment." During the second hour the training films, "Training Employment of Antiaircraft Artillery Regiments" and "Tactical Employment of a Battery of 155 mm. Guns, Sensing of Field Artillery Fire" will be shown in Room 3614. Also on Thursday night the Candidates School will take up Lesson 4 in Aerial Photograph Reading in Room 2530 at 7:30.

Ex-Regulars Enroll In Army Reserve Under New Ruling

Due to recent changes in regulations governing enlistments in the Regular Army Reserve many former regulars now find they are eligible for enlistment and are promptly enrolling, according to Sergt. Norman W. Morgan, chief clerk of the local Army recruiting station, located in the Farm Credit Building, 1300 E street northwest.

Honorably discharged former regulars under 36 years old and in good physical condition are eligible for the Reserve. Married men are now eligible and, under a change in regulations, enlistment in the grade from which discharged is permitted. Recruiting officials describe the Regular Army Reserve as "the soldier's Utopia" because men go on the pay roll without having to take drills, lectures, camps, studies or activities of any kind.

For the convenience of former regulars who may not be able to visit the local recruiting office during business hours officials state that they may phone and arrange an appointment at their convenience.

On Tuesday evening of this week, the Fellowship Club of Petworth Lodge will hold a meeting at the home of Mason Trittipoe, 1825 Monroe street northwest.

Col. Villaret Will Instruct Defense Unit

The District of Columbia antiaircraft defense unit, the 260th Coast Artillery will soon receive the latest type air defense weapons and a new Regular Army instructor.

Officials state that personnel of the unit are to go to the Aberdeen

LIEUT. COL. VILLARET

Proving Ground, Maryland, later this month and drive back the first units of the most modern antiaircraft guns and equipment. The present weapons of the regiment are sadly out of date, it was said.

Later in the spring, the 260th will be assigned a new instructor—Lieut. Col. Eugene Villaret, Coast Artillery, U. S. A. Col. Villaret has been on duty at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, as military attache to that country and to Rumania and Greece.

A native of Pennsylvania, Col. Villaret graduated from West Point in 1914 and served in France during the World War. He is a graduate of the Command and General Staff School, the Coast Artillery School, the Quartermaster Subsistence School and the Ecole Superieure de Guerre in Paris. After the World War he served a tour as assistant military attache to France.

Speakers' Club Meets

At their last regular meeting, the members of the Speaker's Club, which meets every Friday evening at the Jessup Blair Community House in Silver Spring, elected officers for the coming year. The new officers: W. F. Wilkinson, president; Hunter Davidson, vice president; and D. L. Bowman, secretary-treasurer, will be installed at a banquet to be held this Friday, February 3. W. T. Allen will be toastmaster.

Army, Navy Wondering How Many Heads Roosevelt Will Go Over to Replace Retiring High Command

Likelihood of War Historically Gives the Young Men a Break

By J. Gilbert Norris

With most of the Army and Navy high command scheduled for replacement this year, the services are watching to see if the top billets go to ranking officials or if the Commander-in-Chief will jump far down the lists in filling the important posts.

In a number of recent appointments President Roosevelt has sought younger blood and has picked relatively junior officers for key jobs in the military and naval set-up. Observers have pointed out that this tendency is natural in view of the times. Throughout our history, it is said, when the world was at peace, appointments have gone to the next ranking officers, but as war clouds gather, the selection of some outstanding junior is likely.

In the World War, it will be recalled, John J. Pershing was picked from the bottom of the list of general officers to head the A. E. F. Two of the Navy Bureau chiefs, were young commanders. Similarly, after the war, Captains William S. Benson and Robert B. Coontz, were appointed to the highest naval post, Chief of Naval Operations.

Today, as war rages in Europe and Asia, and a strong Germany has its way at Munich, this policy again comes to the fore. Commanders Ben Moreell and Ross T. McIntire were jumped over the heads of many seniors to be Chief Civil Engineer and Surgeon General of the Navy. Commander Ralph R. Waesche was appointed Commandant of the Coast Guard and Brig. Gen. Thomas Holcomb Maj. Gen. Commandant of Marines. Younger men were placed at the head of the Military and Naval Academies, to give another example, Brig. Gen. Jay L. Benedict and Rear Admiral Wilson Brown.

At least two top positions in the Army and probably the entire Navy high command will be replaced this spring and summer. Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff of the Army, must retire for age the end of August, while the four-year term of Maj. Gen. Frank M. Andrews as Commander of the General Headquarters Air Force expires the end of this month. Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, and Harry E. Yarnell, Commander of the Asiatic Fleet, also reach the statutory age limit of the naval service. Their retirement and the resulting shifts probably means, officials state, that all of the four-star admirals and vice admiral billets will change hands, for the first time in years.

A distinct possibility, however, in connection with the Chief of Naval Operations post, is that Admiral Leahy may be continued for a time after his retirement. This is possible under the law and the President may not wish to change both his chief military and naval advisors at the same time. War Department officials said that the retention of Gen. Craig is probably not legally possible.

Outstanding prospect to succeed Gen. Craig is Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, commander of the First Army at New York City. A general officer during the World War and most of the years since, and with a brilliant record, he is considered in line for the appointment. Just below him and with an equally good record is Maj. Gen. John L. DeWitt, commandant of the War College here. Most of the other major generals are nearing the retirement age, and many believe that the President will skip that rank entirely and name a junior brigadier general, such as George C. Marshall, now deputy chief of staff.

Colonels in Line

Practically all of the colonels and lieutenant colonels of the Air Corps are in line for appointment as GHQ Air Force commander. In addition, the President must name a successor to Brig. Gen. Augustine Robbins, assistant chief of Air Corps. The latter's term expired last week.

The names of the present Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of the United States Fleet are most of ten mentioned in connection with naval high command shift. Admiral Claude C. Bloch, commander-in-chief of the Fleet, may come here as chief of naval operations, it is said. Alterately, it predicted that he may continue in his present job for another year.

Admiral Edward C. Kalbfus, now second in command of the Fleet, may step up to commander-in-chief. He has another year to do at sea under normal procedure and nearly three years until retirement. Vice Admiral Adolphus Andrews, commander of the scouting force and recently on duty here as chief of the Bureau of Navigation, is a likely prospect for either the Fleet command or as chief of naval operations. Rear Admiral J. O. Richardson, chief of the Bureau of Navigation since last summer, may either relieve Admiral Leahy as chief of operations or go to China as Admiral Yarnell's successor, according to speculation in naval circles.

Should President Roosevelt jump these ranking officials in filling the top Navy commands, officers state that Rear Adm. Harold R. Stark, recently Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, is a likely "youthful" selection.

Two Navy Department bureau chiefs must be appointed this spring, as Rear Adm. Charles Conard, paymaster general, retires the first of April, and the term of Rear Adm. Harold G. Bowen, Chief of the Bureau of Engineering, expires June 1. In line for the paymaster generalcy are senior captains Frederick G. Payne and Ray Spear, but the prospect of a commander being named is not at all remote. Admiral Bowen, only 56, may be reappointed, it is said.

As the result of the "accent on youth" in the services, the average age of Army general officers has been reduced by two or three years. This came about from a policy adopted by Gen. Craig when he became Chief of Staff three years ago, of appointing only officers with at least six years to serve to general's rank. Brig Gen. Daniel I. Sultan, 53, former D. C. Commissioner is the youngest permanent line general, while Brig Gen. Walter Kilner, 50, is youngest temporary officer of that rank.

Marines Join In Study of Reserves

Special Board Calls On Local Officers For Recommendations On Administration

Officers of the Marine Corps Reserve living ni the Washington area were asked yesterday to submit suggestions and recommendations regarding the administration of the reserve to the special board now studying the problem.

Capt. John W. Augustine, senior member of a special board appointed by Lieut. Col. Harvey L. Miller, commanding officer of the Fifth Marine Battalion, asks for the advice of local officers. The group named to consider changes in chapter 13 of the Marine Corps Manual, will meet February 8, at the Armory.

The Fifth Battalion detailed a firing squad for the funeral of the late Morris Lichtenberg, formerly first sergeant of Company B, Fifth Battalion. First Sergeant Lichtenberg enlisted in 1932 in the Sixth Marine Reserve Brigade and remained with the Fifth Battalion at the time of reorganization in 1934 and only recently served his connection with the battalion, due to press of personal business. Lieut. R. E. Copes, commanding officer of Company B, and Marine Gunner M. E. Thompson attended the funeral. The following men were selected to represent the battalion as a firing squad: Gy. Sgt. Eicholtz, in charge; First Sgt. Nevin, Sup. Sgt. Bloom, Sgts. Syle, Studdiford and Burnell, Cpl. Holmes and Private First Fisher.

Readers' School Forum

By Helen Drake

Each week this column will present representative answers of Washington citizens to a problem confronting students, parents of students, or teachers of students. Readers are invited to send in questions they'd like answered to The Post Education Editor. Today's question is:

R. G. VANDERLIP, 241 Quackenbos street northwest—English instructor . . . It's up to the individual student to get through foundation in English. All students have an equal opportunity for acquiring an extensive vocabulary, proper spelling, pronunciation, and grammar, and if they take this opportunity, they would have a thorough foundation. By and large, I believe, they have a more fundamental foundation in English today then boys and girls of the same age 30 years ago.

F. O. FEINSILVER, 529 Lamont street northwest, auditor . . . A student can only get out of a subject what he puts into it. Although the high schools offer an adequate knowledge of English to the students, the parents do not teach them the necessity of this valuable training while they are in school and, therefore, they do not take this subject seriously.

MRS. S. B. BRUTON, 1305 West Virginia avenue northeast. Yes. In my own personal experience I have found that most of the girls can construct a letter that is correct in spelling, grammar and punctuation. As a rule, most graduates are good spellers, but lack the experience of the business world.

MRS. E. McLAUGHLIN, 1931 Calvert street northwest, hospital aide . . . Judging from the English I have heard, I say that they positively do not have the fundamentals of English. In fact, the English language, as a whole, is running down and people don't speak as well as they used to. Teachers should stress the fact that constant practice is necessary for the mastery of the subject.

S. HOGAN, 1526 Seventeenth street northwest, furniture salesman . . . No. There are four fundamental reasons why students are not thorough in the English foundation; insufficient time given to the subject, lack of interest on part of the teacher and the student, inability to concentrate, and lack of application.

MRS. E. GRAD, 926 Massachusetts avenue northwest, manager of a laundry . . . Yes. As English is required for four years in the high schools, the majority of graduates can express themselves in a very interesting manner. A foreign language should not be taught to students who don't like English. The student should be taught to consider English as one of the most important subjects he takes.

MRS R. FOWLER, 6746 Fairfax road, Bethesda, Md. No. Most students do not have the command of English because the subject is not made colorful and interesting by the teacher. Another great factor is the lack of home training. English should be an instrument for pleasure and not for the technical parts of a sentence.

A. P. MERGARDT, 1005 New York avenue northwest, manager . . . No. Most of the responsibility rests on the students themselves, but if the home environment is such that it retards education, the task is greater. If correct English isn't practiced constantly, 90 per cent of it is lost, and the student cannot regain that without strenuous effort on his part.

Chase to Lecture On Decorating

Stanhope Chase, well known Washington decorator, will inaugurate a series of illustrated lectures in interior decorating Friday night at the Institute of Social Arts, 2017 S street northwest. The lecturer will discuss furniture arrangement, color fabrics, wall and floor covering and accessories. The series is also scheduled to cover specific problems presented by members of Mr. Chase's class.

Dr. Kindler's Notes

with the identical notes of the beginning.

The "Allegretto Scherzando" is what its name implies. With its ticking woodwinds, the assertion that it was in part intended to mock Maelzel, the inventor of the metronome, does not seem too far fetched. What is more important is the spirit of its frank and ingenious gaiety, which throughout this short movement speaks for itself.

The third movement in "tempo di minuetto" starts boisterously, but subsequently becomes more lyrical. In the trio the only real cantabile melody of the entire symphony appears, but even then a tripping accompaniment in the cellos preserves the "lighter" character which is the symphony's underlying motive-power. This quality becomes in the finale a veritable riot. If ever Beethoven (as has been said) was apt to become "unbuttoned" in his humor, it is in this quite Rabelaisian movement. But where most commentators agree on this particular quality, that which is often overlooked is the humor's eventual grandeur. This was the result of a boldness of invention which stands nearly alone in the realm of music. What this sometimes, even for our ears, nearly strident harshness of contrasts (for instance, continuous Cs against C sharp) must have sounded like to the ears of the good people of the time we can readily imagine. To me it is one of Beethoven's grandest efforts in the realm of humor, bucolic to a degree, and therefore true to his own innermost idea of what humor should be. In a lesser man's treatment it might have easily become merely strident or even commonplace. With Beethoven, humor becomes what it had been in the minds of Erasmus and Rabelais, Shakespeare and Cervantes, namely, laughter of the gods. And it is when it is divine that humor takes its place with the qualities of "deep feeling," etc., which are often (and without justification) considered to have been "greater." Eventually, as in the case of the above-mentioned great ones, humor takes its proper and deservedly high place; and so with Beethoven in his "Eighth Symphony, it becomes, once again, Olympian.

"On the Steppes of Central Asia" . . . . Borodin

The composer himself has given us a description of the work, which I herewith translate: "In the silence of the sandy steppes of Central Asia we hear the refrain of a peaceful Russian song. We also hear the melancholy sounds of oriental chants. We hear the hoofbeats of horses and camels approaching; a caravan escorted by Russian soldiers traverses the immense desert; continues its long voyage without fear, abandoning itself with confidence to the watchfulness of its protectors. The songs of the Russians and those of the natives melt together in a semiharmony, and their refrains are heard for a long time in the desert, gradually becoming lost in the infinite distance."

"Islamey," Fantaisie Orientale — Balakirev

"Islamey," by Balakirev, is another Russian composition in which oriental influences are evident. It is one of the few compositions of this composer known today. His influence on younger musicians (it was he who founded the famous group of five in Russia, including Moussorgsky, Cui, Borodin and Rimsky) in what makes him important in the history of music.

The return to native folk tunes in order to create a genuine Russian art of music, which he preached incessantly and to the exclusion of other influences, gives him historical significance, and inspired him to create a few genuinely original works of which "Islamey" is the most conspicuous example. It was inspired by a journey through the Caucasus, and is built on three melodies of semi-oriental character—a brilliant opening of turbulent and violent rhythms, leads to a lovely interlude of melodic charm; and this is followed by a return to the first part, which leads to a brilliant and exciting finish.

Shahan Society Begins Debate Schedule

Five Meets Slated At Home, Seven Away From Campus

The debating schedule for the Shahan Debating Society of the Catholic University for the spring season was announced yesterday by the Rev. P. J. O'Connor, acting dean of men and moderator of the society. The schedule includes five debates in Washington and seven debates away from home for the varsity debating teams and four Washington debates for the freshmen.

"That Business Should Be Financed by the Government" has been selected as the topic for the varsity debates, with one exception, the debate with the University of Georgia. This subject has been selected by all the intercollegiate debaters throughout the United States as the debate question for the current academic year.

Manhattan College will be met next Friday evening, February 10, in McMahon Hall auditorium on the university campus, with John J. Hart, jr., '41, and Francis A. Spitzig, '40, taking the affirmative side of the question for Catholic University. Fordham University will be debated before the Catholic Sisters College Saturday evening, February 11, with Robert Stickle, '41, and Robert T. Miller, '41, speaking for C. U.

William Hotz, '39, and Walter J. Donovan, '40, will debate the University of Georgia on February 15, taking the affirmative of the question. "That Modern Civilization Destroys Personality." On February 20, Cornelius L. Maloney, '40, and Leo S. Schumacher, '40, will debate Holy Cross College and John P. Morrow, '39, and William A. Endebrock, '41, will oppose Boston College on April 1.

Away from home William J. Hotz, '39, and Walter J. Donovan, '40, will uphold the affirmative on the question, "That Business Should Be Financed by the Government" before Trinity College, of Hartford, Conn., on February 27, while Cornelius L. Maloney and Leo S. Schumacher will take the negative side in a debate with Manhattan College in New York City the same evening. Hotz and Donovan will again take the affirmative against Holy Cross College, at Worcester, Mass., on February 28, while the Maloney-Schumacher team will oppose Fordham, at New York, the same night, upholding a negative point of view.

Cunard Plans Weekly Cruise To Bahamas

Service Will Start May 6, Continue Until December 9

Cunard White Star announces that it will inaugurate a weekly cruise service to Nassau on May 6, continuing it until December 9. In all 32 cruises will be made. The main ship will be the Lancastria, which will make 30 of the round trips. On June 3 the Carinthia and on September 16 the new Mauretania will each take over a cruise in order to give the Lancastria crew vacations.

The Lancastria was remodeled several years ago for cruising in the tropics. She made numerous trips out of England to resorts in the Azores, the Madeiras, the Canaries and countries on the Mediterranean Sea.

According to the present schedule the Lancastria will leave New York every Saturday at 5 p. m., reaching Nassau at 6 a. m. the following Tuesday. She will leave Nassau Wednesday at 1 a. m., arriving back in New York Friday noon. This schedule allows for a stay approximately 18 hours ashore in Nassau.

The minimum rate for the Lancastria cruises will be $55, with stop-over privilege $80, one-way passage, $50.

At the present time Cunard White Star is operating a series of eight-day cruises to Nassau and Havana with the Georgic and Britannic. These cruises will continue until the middle of April.

The Lancastria has been painted white for the Nassau cruise service, white being heat-resisting in the tropics.

North Carolina Season Plans

Southern Pines, N. C.

The program of entertainment for February will get off to a start on Tuesday evening with the chambers of commerce of Aberdeen, Southern Pines, Pinehurst and Carthage holding their annual banquet and get-together meeting at the Carolina Hotel, Pinehurst. Former Representative J. Walter Lambeth, of Washington, will make the principal address of the evening. He will be introduced by former State Senator Union L. Spence, dean of the Moore County bar.

The activities will continue with the Pine Dodgers, the women's golfing organization at the Southern Pines Country Club, entertaining at a large luncheon at the country club on Wednesday. The luncheon will be preceded by an 18-hole medal tournament being played over the No. 1 grass green course. The tournament will be open to visiting golfers at the hotels. Miss Laura Kelsey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Preston T. Kelsey, of Montclair, N. J., will be in charge.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Emmett E. Boone, of West Hampton Beach, Long Island, will be hostess at a bridge luncheon at the Pine Needles Club in Knollwood. The sport events for the week include an 18-hole medal tournament, to be played at the Southern Pines Country Club Saturday and Sunday, and will be followed with another tournament at the Pine Needles Club on Sunday.

Winter Tourists on Iroquois Will Visit Sunny Climes

Winter will be a forgotten word to those sailing February 15 on the 13-day West Indies cruise aboard the Clyde-Mallory liner Iroquois to exchange Northern ice and chills for sunshine and exotic scenes.

En route to Miami, Havana and Puerto Rico, the Iroquois will provide a complete and varied program of ably directed sports tournaments, festive dinner parties and romantic dances. Placid hours will be spent sunning in a cozy deck chair, or for the more ambitious, a fun-packed game of shuffleboard or quoits.

Two stops at Miami, one on the trip southward and again on returning, will enable the sun-seekers to loll on gleaming, warm beaches, comfortable and contented in the sun, or frolic in the gleeming crystal-clear water. Big game fishing has its enthusiastic devotees, matching their wits and brawn against tuna, sailfish, giant ray—even sharks. Others will make it a point to be at palm-fringed Hialeah for the racing; watch the closely contested speedboat and sailboat races on blue Biscayne Bay, or saunter about the shipping and entertainment centers.

Grim, frowning Morro Castle will greet the Iroquois as it rounds La Marine Point to enter San Juan, Puerto Rico's cozy, quaint, interesting resort city. Regarded as one of the most remarkable examples in the western world of an old walled city, San Juan opens an extensive vista of historical interest, with ample time to enjoy it.

Atop a hill in La Fortaleza, built in 1639, to be used as a residence for the Spanish governor. Now it is occupied by the American governor of the island. Then there is Morro Castle, a superb example of an old colonial fortress, sternly guarding the harbor since 1539.

Mythology trickles interestingly through San Juan's history. In all probability, the visitor, browsing through old San Cristobal Fort that overlooks the Atlantic, will be told how one of the sentry boxes was haunted and sentinel after sentinel disappeared in a burst of flame and a cloud of sulphurous smoke. The harassed Spanish governor finally ordered that the passage to the sentry box be walled up.

Sparkling, carefree Havana will be the next stop on this sunshine cruise. A full day will be spent mingling with the gay cosmopolitan throng, laughing and dancing and being hilariously amused at the smart restaurants, glittering night clubs and native cabarets bursting with life and rhumba music. Havana is a charming, gracious hostess that is always remembered.

Shopping baskets crammed with intriguing wares and trinkets from the native markets and bazaars, the visitors will enjoy "foreign" surroundings by wandering leisurely about the age-mellowed streets of San Juan and Havana, discovering new thrills and sights that push winter far back in the mental background.

Cruises to the southern sunshine cities have become a yearly ritual with many tourists, heightening the winter exodus to such an extent that the Iroquois is scheduled to make two additional cruises on March 1 and 15.

12,000 Miles of Sunshine

Cook's 1939 Cairo-to-the-Cape Safari, now en route under the leadership of Capt. George F. Shearwood, drew its American membership from all points of the compass. The four men and four women who sailed from New York early in January to begin the trip to Cairo came from such widely separated parts of the United States as Kennebunk, Me., and Charleston, W. Va.; Madison, Wis., and Washington, D. C.; Utica, N. Y., and Dallas, Tex.; Cincinnati, Ohio, and San Francisco, Calif. When the safari, booked to capacity of 11, is joined at Shellal by its remaining member, from Australia, Capt. Shearwood will have with him a group which hails, almost literally, from the Arctic to the Antipodes, to enjoy 12,000 miles of African winter sunshine and de luxe adventure.

Japanese Liner Renamed Kamakura

The transpacific liner Chichibu Maru has been officially renamed Kamakura Maru, S. Yanase, of the N. Y. K. Line, said.

Kamakura is the first place of interest to American tourists entering Japan after arriving in Yokohama. Thousands of tourists have photographs of themselves standing under the giant bronze Buddha or "Daibutu" of Kamakura.

Kamakura, 14 miles from Yokohama, has played a brilliant role in Japan's history. Until nearly the end of the twelfth century it was but a small fishing village. Then it rose to be the second city of the empire, with a reputed population of 200,000 persons. It remained the seat of government until 1333, when it suffered a decline which lasted until comparatively modern times.

Many relics of grandeur remain in addition to the giant Buddha. These include the interesting temples of Kentyozi and Enkakuzi and the great shrine of Turugaoka. Kamakura is now a popular watering place for Japan's elite, with a resident population of 8,000.

Cultures Feared Origin of Outbreak

East Lansing, Mich., Feb. 4 (AP).—Michigan State College officials were trying tonight to locate the source of undulant fever germs which took the life of one student and caused the illness of 21 others and as many residents of East Lansing.

Dean Ward Giltner, of the college's veterinary science division, said the trail apparently led to a third-floor laboratory in the building which houses the world's largest collection of cultures of the undulant fever micrococcus.

The student who died was A. Arthur Goldberg, of Newark, N. J. The college hospital has been treating 21 other students for the ailment. President Robert T. Shaw said none of the remaining cases was severe.

SPECIAL ARTICLES Poll Of Public Opinion | SECTION III

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1939 B

New Study of '38 Election Shows Definite Conservative Trend

Voters Still Against 3d Term for FDR

Only 31% Favor Re-election of President in 1940, Survey Shows

By Institute of Public Opinion.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—The third-term barometer of the American Institute of Public Opinion continues to show a large majority of American voters opposed to a third term for President Roosevelt, as Senator Rush Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, and other Administration foes seek a Senate resolution against another term for the President.

Although the survey obviously does not indicate how President Roosevelt would fare against an actual opponent in a third-term race, it does reveal that less than one voter in three favors such a race at this time.

The vote is:

"Do you favor a third term for President Roosevelt?"

YES 31%
NO 69%

On the basis of the 1936 election, this represents approximately 21,000,000 votes against a third term to 13,500,000 in favor. The Institute survey covered a carefully selected cross-section of the voting population in all sections of the country.

Public Divided On Holt Resolution

In spite of the sentiment against a third term, public opinion is leaning away from Senator Holt's resolution to put the Senate on record against another Roosevelt term, the survey shows.

The West Virginia Democrat, long in the Administration's black books, has promised to introduce the same measure put forward by Senator La Follette in 1928 declaring against a third term for President Coolidge. The La Follette motion passed, with many present-day Democratic Senators supporting it.

Republican voters in the present survey favor such a resolution by 3 to 1, but Democrats oppose it. For the country at large the survey vote is:

"Would you like to see the Senate go on record against a third term for President Roosevelt?"

YES 49%
NO 51%

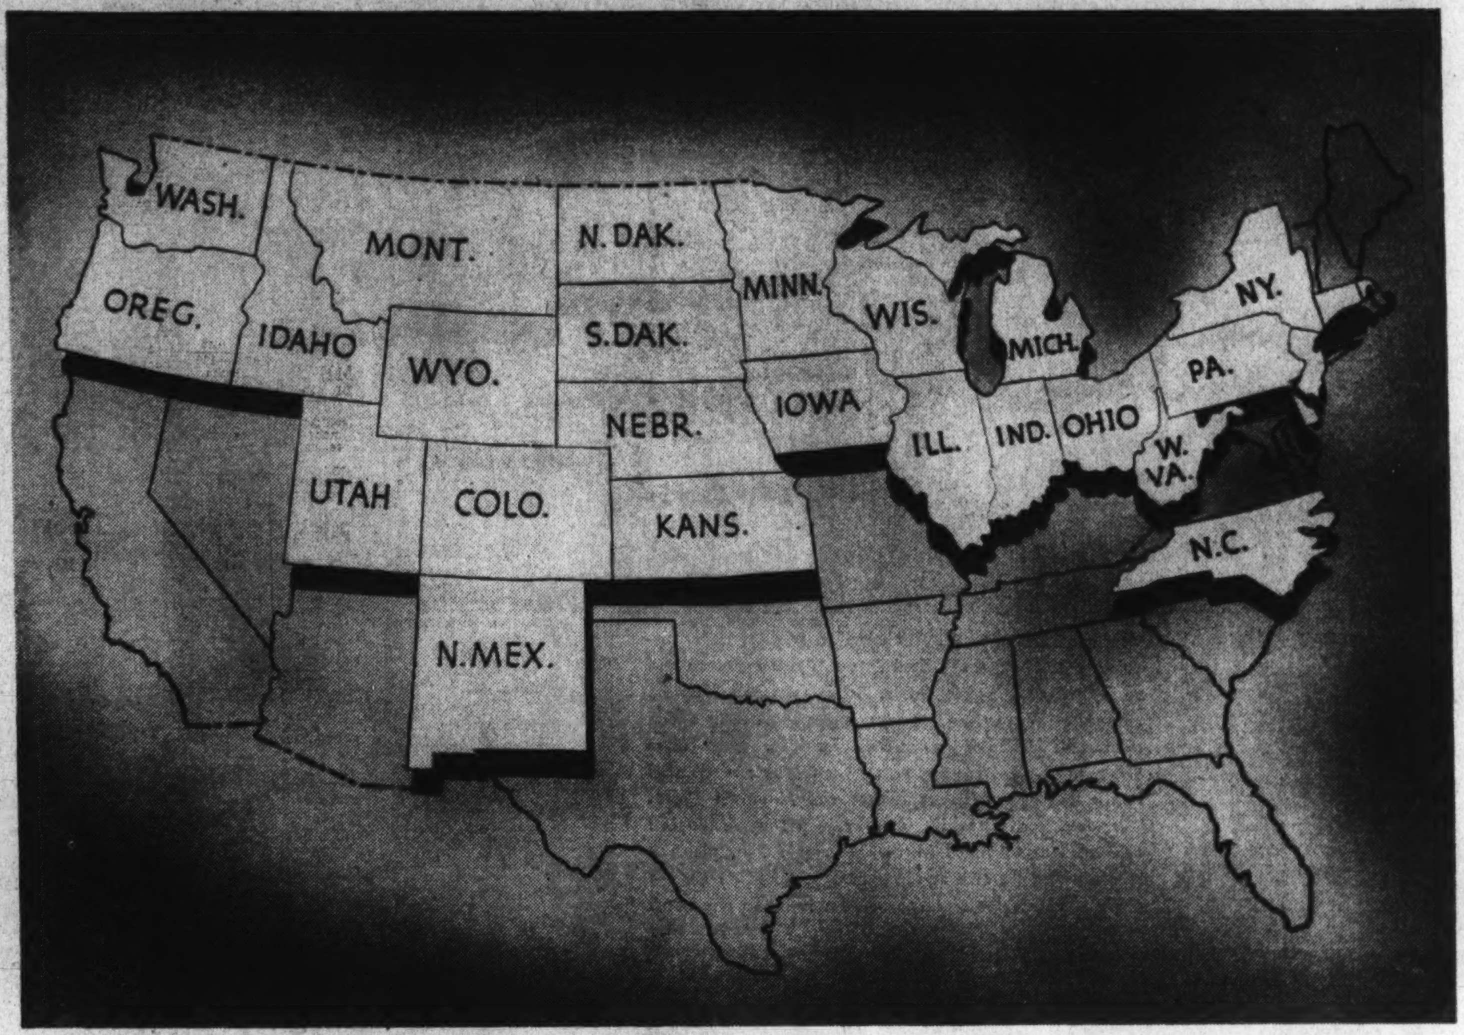
"I'm not in favor of a third term, but there might be times when it would be the thing to do." is the typical comment of an Illinois voter. "Let's cross that bridge when we come to it."

Other frequent comments on this side were: "It's not up to the Senate; it's up to the voters," and "I'm against it because I hope he does run."

The Institute of Public Opinion has measured the ups and downs of third-term sentiment ever since President Roosevelt's re-election in 1936, and it is interesting to note that although sentiment has increased slightly since December, the number in favor of a third term is no higher than it was two years ago.

Less than half of the Democrats in the survey (47 per cent) said they would like to have Roosevelt run again, while Republicans were almost unanimously opposed.

Map Shows Nation-wide Conservative Swing



Democratic Party leaders are in disagreement over what was the principal cause of Republican gains last November. Was it chiefly because of "local issues," or because of a nation-wide conservative swing?

The above map, based on a new tabulation of election figures, shows where the Republican Congressional vote jumped 5 percentage points or more over 1936. The map shows a solid block of 26 States stretching from coast to coast. Smaller Republican gains were recorded in nine additional States.

Coming Polls

Look in The Post this week for polls on:

Should Federal employes pay State income taxes?

Should Government bonds be tax exempt?

If Roosevelt is not a candidate in 1940, would you prefer a conservative like Garner, Clark, or Byrd, or a New Dealer like Hopkins, Wallace or Barkley?

Gallup Poll results appear in The Washington Post every Monday, Wednesday and Sunday.

Where G. O. P. Gained in November Election

The following percentages, from official election returns, show that the Republican Congressional vote increased in 36 States last November, including gains of 5 percentage points or more in 27 of them. Percentages are on a two-party basis except in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Result May Affect Democratic Strategy

Election Map Backs Farley's Theory of Shift To Right; Shows New Dealers Err in Attributing Upsets to Local Causes

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

NEW YORK, FEB. 5.—Nine times out of ten the publication of official election returns, coming many weeks after the election fights have been decided, attracts little attention. But the official election figures for the 435 Congressional districts involved in last fall's voting, soon to be released, are packed with argument and dynamite—dynamite that may jolt the New Deal wing of the Democratic Party and bolster the conservatives.

GALLUP

Ever since the November election the two wings of the party have been debating what the Nation's vote meant. Did it reveal a country-wide shift away from the New Deal? Or could Republican gains be credited primarily to State issues and local Democratic quarrels?

The dispute comes down to the fundamental question of New Deal policy between now and 1940 and has a strong bearing on nomination strategy. It ranges President Roosevelt and Party Chairman James A. Farley on opposite sides.

Plotted on a map, however, the cold figures of what happened in the country's 435 Congressional districts last November will go a long way toward settling the question. A tabulation of virtually complete official returns by the American Institute of Public Opinion indicates that the figures will uphold Jim Farley and underline the Nation-wide character of the reaction to the New Deal.

This, in brief, is what the tabulation shows:

1. The Republican Party increased its strength in 36 out of 48 States. Whereas G. O. P. Congressional candidates in the country large received only 40.5 per cent of the major party vote in the 1936 Roosevelt landslide, they took 48 per cent last November—a pendulum-swing of 7.5 points.

2. Republican gains of 5 points or more occurred in a solid band of 26 States stretching from coast to coast. On a map, these States reach from Rhode Island and Connecticut on the East to Washington and Oregon on the Pacific. They run through industrial, agricultural and grazing regions with remarkable evenness. (See map.)

3. The most surprising fact of all is that the five great adjoining industrial States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Michigan—representing 142 electoral votes—shifted "right" to almost exactly the same extent.

In spite of wide differences in local issues and candidates, the shifts were:

	Percentage Points Change in Dem. Vote
Michigan	—8
Indiana	—7
Ohio	—9
Pennsylvania	—9
New York	—8

Outside the traditionally Democratic South, on the other hand, the only State-wide Democratic gains were in Maryland and Maine.

Figures Bolster Farley Argument

The official figures will give ammunition to conservatives and "middle-roaders" in the Democratic party, but they also throw an entirely new light on some of the forces at work in the victory of Gov. James in Pennsylvania, the defeat of Gov. Murphy in Michigan and the spectacular race of District Attorney Dewey in New York, to mention only a few instances.

For Jim Farley the figures will probably be bitter-sweet. While President Roosevelt has held to the theory that local conditions and dissatisfaction with State machines were principally responsible for G. O. P. gains, Farley has laid the blame on a Nation-wide "undercurrent" away from the New Deal.

So important has the question become that the party chairman has dispatched letters to scores of party workers and office-holders throughout the country, asking for analyses of what happened.

The Congressional figures will answer many of Farley's questions, but the facts give him a more anxious problem in party-building than he has faced for some time. Apart from the South, where there were no Republican candidates in many districts, the only States which stand out from the general tide are Maryland, Maine and to a certain extent Missouri.

Maryland is the home of Senator Millard Tydings, whom both Farley and President Roosevelt opposed unsuccessfully in the primary "purge" of last September. Missouri is the balliwick of Senator Bennett Champ Clark, a frequent New Deal critic who was returned to Washington this November with a big majority.

Biggest Gains For G. O. P. in Midwest

The Republican's biggest gains came in the tier of States along the Canadian border from Lake Superior to Idaho, and especially in Wiscousin and Minnesota where the G. O. P. gained at the expense of third party movements. The section shifts were as follows:

	Per cent Congressional Vote Republican 1936	1938	Shift
New England	51%	54.5%	+3.5
Mid Atlantic	43	51	+8
East Central	44	51	+7
West Central	49	58	+9
South	21	20	—1
West	37	42	+5

In the 280 individual Congressional districts where the Republicans gained strength, the range of shift between 1936 and 1938 was as follows:

Republican Gains
0-2 Points	34 Districts
3-4 Points	51 "
5-6 Points	44 "
7-8 Points	44 "
9-10 Points	57 "
11 and over	50 "

Michigan Setback Part of U. S. Trend

Even before the November elections Democratic leaders were doubtful about several States because of local issues. Michigan was one of these because of the sit-down strikes that had plagued Democratic Gov. Frank Murphy, up for re-election. Pennsylvania, with scandals dogging the State's "Little New Deal," and Kansas, complaining of farm prices, were others.

But the official figures will show that Democratic candidates for Congress did just about as well in these States as their colleagues throughout the East, Middle West and West.

Rejuvenation of Old-Age Pensions Likely This Session

By Robert C. Albright.

At this distance, we can't exactly make out what it will be. The final bill hasn't been drawn and the rought draft is only just taking shape. But the money boys and pension experts have been called in to look it over, and any day now it might happen.

When it does—look out! It is going to make $30-every-Thursday look like fish on Friday.

This bill won't stop at pensions for the old folks—15,000,000 of them—God bless their votes.

There will be a generous dash of monetary reform and a basic feature will be use of bank credit to reach all objectives. Present pay-roll taxes would be repealed and the entire social security system due for a face-lifting. Several old age pension plans and economic theories would be drained of their life's blood to provide a new method of financing benefits.

And will there be benefits? Listen. Pensions, reduced unemployment, stabilized business and a balanced budget, to mention a few. This isn't any halfway measure.

Senator Sheridan Downey, of California pension fame, hasn't been twiddling his thumbs at the Capitol all these weeks. He's been drafting a plan.

And this isn't another "ham 'n' egg" plan. Senator Downey left "$30-every-Thursday" behind him when he came to the Senate.

The new bill would provide only $100 every month in "social dividends" for our "senior citizens." And the lucky old gaffers include just about everybody over 55, retired from gainful employment.

That much is entirely clear—that and about balancing the budget and stabilizing business and starting the Nation's jobless back to work. The only thing still a little hazy is how the money would be raised. But that is simply a matter of monetary mechanics and the whole thing will be figured out in the next few days.

Senator Downey explains the underlying idea is for the Federal Government to "monetize its own credit rather than allow private bankers to do it." Which sounds simple enough.

Step aside, Dr. Townsend. Here comes another plan!

This business of being the youngest House member and the Congressional "baby" and all that sort of thing isn't all that it's touted. Ask Representative Beckworth (Democrat), of Texas, this session's junior member.

It is one thing getting elected to Congress and another thing convincing others you "belong," the young member has found. Just when all of the doorkeepers, guards and pages were wised up that Beckworth really is a full fledged Congressman, the crowning embarrassment occurred last week.

Representative C. Arthur Anderson, Missouri's Twelfth District two-termer, impatiently had snapped for a page. The boy was slow in coming, and Anderson looked around for another. Just then he spotted Beckworth.

"Boy," shouted Anderson. "Go get me my hat and coat."

Blushing profusely, Beckworth declined the honor.

"I'm only another Congressman," he explained.

It was Anderson's turn to be embarrassed.

If one month's workout offers a fair test of the temper of the new Congress, net results are not encouraging for either future harmony or continued Administration sway.

In that month—

Only one bill to the White House—WPA deficiency—with the President's estimates badly slashed.

Two Cabinet nominations and a Supreme Court appointment approved, but confirmation of a Federal District judge checkmated by opposition of two Virginia Senators.

Summer recess appointment of a member of the Labor Relations Board not sent to Senate when battle lines formed.

Four Presidential appointments still undergoing soul-searching Senate sub-committee inquiry—Thomas R. Amlie to be I. C. C. commissioner not the least.

Dies-un-American committee investigation extended by the House when Administration wanted otherwise.

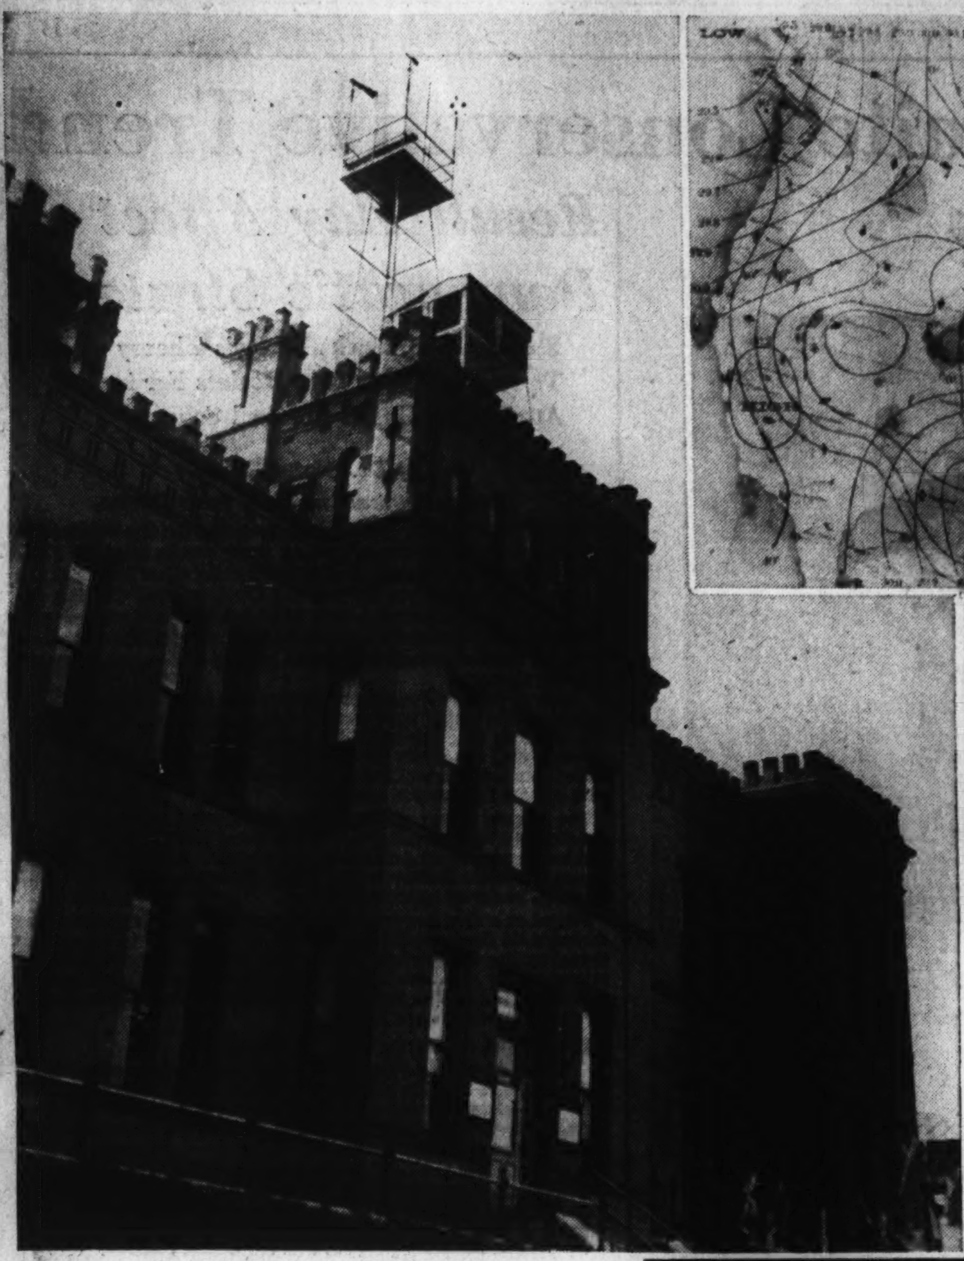
Formulation of new Government reorganization bill moved forward but on a basis of compromise.

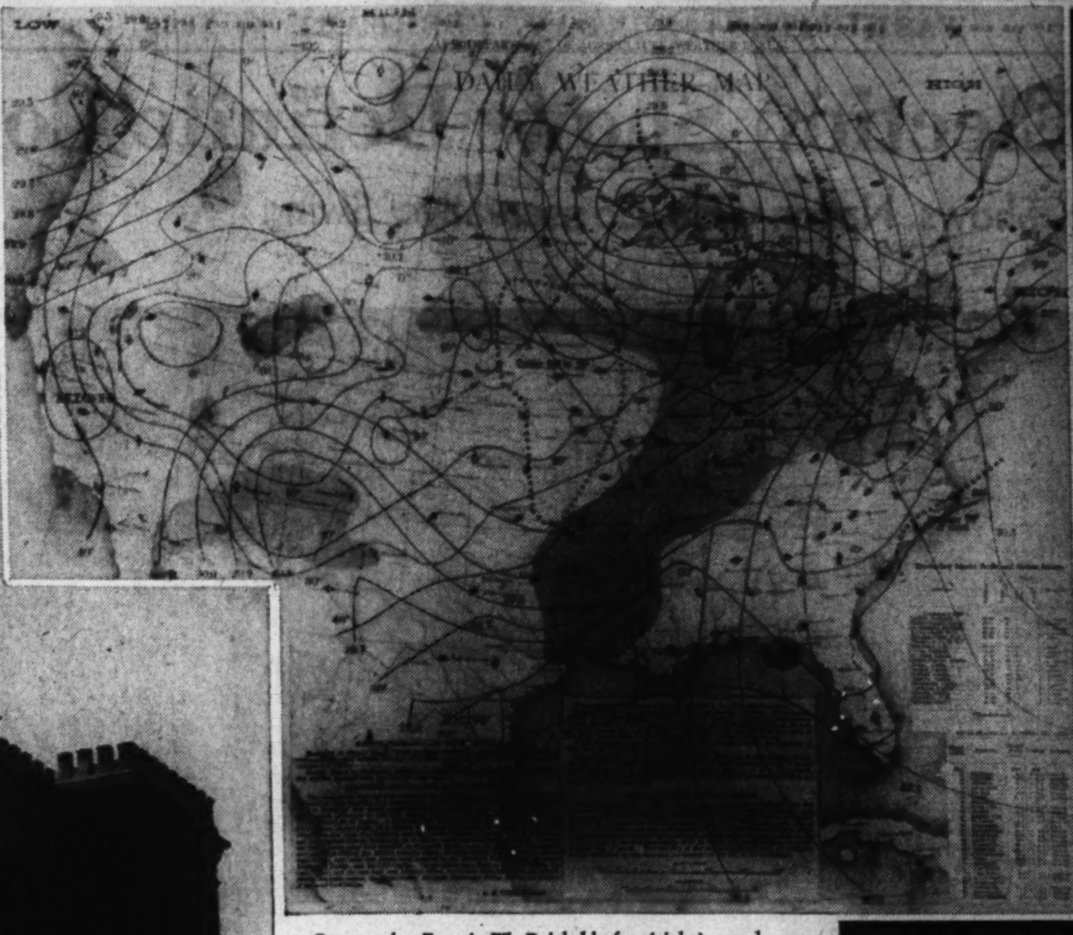
Bi-partisan accord on foreign policy endangered by side dispute over what President told or didn't tell a Senate committee.

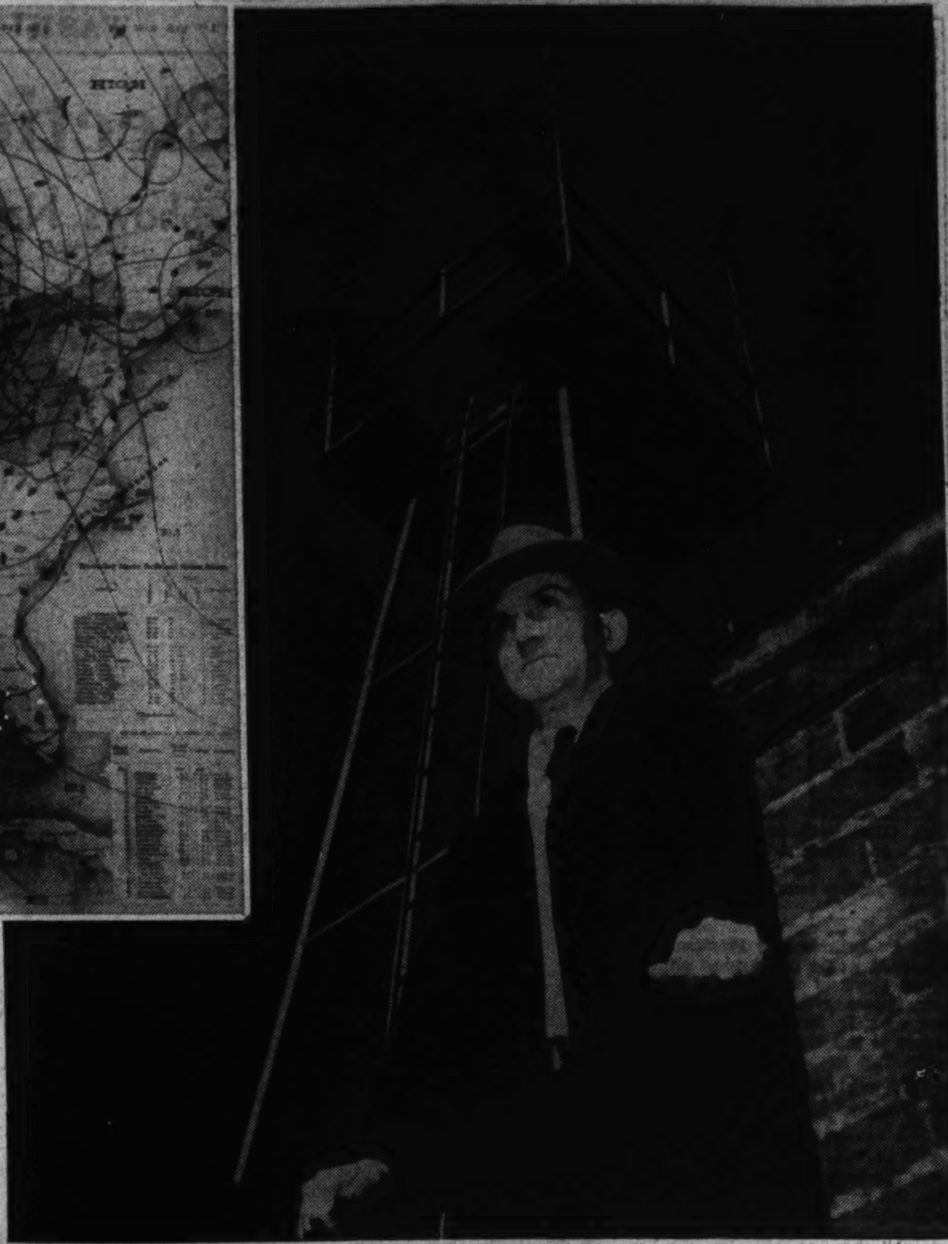
On the credit side, rail relief legislation, social security act revision and the President's new National defense program were making headway in House committees.

But the ledger doesn't balance. After nearly five weeks the Administration's legislative accounts incline to the red. If one month is a test of temper, even of bad temper, this will go down as the President's first hostile Congress.

United States 'Weatherman' Will Be Sixty-nine Years Old Thursday







Commander Francis W. Reichelderfer (right), newly appointed Chief of the United States Weather Bureau and an experienced meteorologist, is in charge of all its branches. Best known, perhaps, is the forecasting which the bureau does from six centers twice daily. Head offices of the bureau and forecast center for this area are located in the building at Twenty-fourth and M streets (left). The data for the daily weather map for Washington (above) are assembled in the Forecast Room, pictured below, where the men at the high desk record on various kinds of charts the reports of 430 stations in one hour.

Was First Assigned To War Department

Weather Bureau Later Transferred To Department of Agriculture; Was Started February 9, 1870

By Rae Lewis.

You may think that the "most interesting topic of conversation" right now is war, or love, or politics, or sports, but you are mistaken if you do. The most popular subject is still the weather. And the remark which leads all others is:

"What does the weatherman say?"

This may seem a rash statement to those who hold out for "Has the mailman come yet?" and perhaps Mr. Gallup will make a survey some day on this familiar and homely topic and end all debate. But the fact remains that the weather interests everybody. Generals and admirals have to be concerned with it in their war maneuvers and in actual conflict. The suitor consults the weather report before inviting the girl friend for a ride around the Speedway or deciding to stay at her house and play checkers while the storm rages outside. The politician watches the weather carefully, for it visibly affects audiences and has a material effect on elections. And who ever attended or listened to a World Series or a football game and wasn't concerned from hour to hour with the weather?

Who is the weather man, or what is he? Actually, of course, there is no such person, but the United States Weather Bureau under the Department of Agriculture has come to be known under that title. The bureau isn't very old, dating as a Federal service only from February 9, 1870, and getting ready to celebrate its sixty-ninth birthday next Thursday.

Back in 1747 Benjamin Franklin, having made arrangements with an acquaintance in Boston to observe an eclipse of the moon, made the important discovery that a storm is a moving formation. There was a storm at that hour in Philadelphia, but the sky was clear and the observation possible in Boston, thereby informing Franklin that a storm is a moving formation, although he at first assumed there could likewise be no eclipse observed at that hour in Boston. As soon as the fact was fully recognized that this was true, it was desired to keep track of storms and announce their approach, but means of communication were then too slow and uncertain. After the invention of the telegraph in 1837 reception of simultaneous observations from different parts of the country was put into partial operation but this was ended by the War Between the States.

Lake Storms Forecast

Later the Great Lakes storms, which were so severe and caused so much damage, led Cincinnati to ask Prof. Cleveland Abbe of their observatory to undertake the forecasting of the lake storms, and the telegraph company transmitted the messages free of charge. This was so successful that it attracted widespread notice in the country and the practice spread to the interior to the benefit of agriculture and commerce as well as shipping on the lakes.

In 1870, H. E. Paines, of Wisconsin, introduced a bill into Congress to appropriate $20,000 to make the weather service national. The bill was passed on February 9 and the weather service of the United States was thus inaugurated. It was made part of the Signal Service under the War Department and Gen. Albert J. Myer became its first head. There were only 24 stations. The first warning was issued on November 1 of that year, and the first daily weather map was issued January 1 of the following year. This country was the fourth to issue such daily maps, following the Netherlands, England and France.

Gen. William B. Hazen headed the service from Myer's death in 1880 until his own, in 1887. He was succeeded by Capt. A. W. Greely until the weather service and the signal service were separated in 1891, and the former was made a separate bureau and placed under the Department of Agriculture. Mark W. Harrington, then professor of astronomy and director of the observatory at the University of Micrigan, became the first chief of the United States Weather Bureau and served briefly. Willis L. Moore followed him in 1895, and was succeeded by Willis R. Gregg, who served until his death, only last year.

Reichelderfer Now Bureau Chief

New chief of this hard-working unit is Commander Francis W. Reichelderfer, noted naval meteorologist, who took office January 1. Although a young man, Commander Reichelderfer is experienced in meteorology and developed the "air-mass and frontal analysis" methods in the meteorological service of naval aeronautics. He was a pioneer in developing the meteorological service essential to aviation in the United States. A native of Indiana and graduate of Northwestern University in 1917, Commander Reichelderfer saw war service as an ensign on aerological duty with the Naval Reserve force for aviation at stations in the North Atlantic antisubmarine patrol. Following the war he qualified as a pilot in the heavier-than-air, lighter-than-air and free balloon branches of the Naval Aeronautical Service. In 1919 he went to Lisbon as a meteorologist at the European terminus of the first trans-Atlantic flight of the Navy's heavier-than-air craft.

Between 1922 and 1928 he was in charge of reorganization and development of the Naval Meteorological Service, administering 25 stations for observation and forecasting, and for the first three years was on daily duty in the forecast division of the Weather Bureau. In 1925 he established the air mass and frontal analysis methods of forecasting throughout the Navy's Meteorological Service. Following this work, he was meteorologist assigned to the dirigible Los Angeles, meanwhile making extensive studies in Europe of methods of observation and weather forecasting. He not only was active in developing meteorological data, but used it himself in connection with the Navy balloons entered in eight annual international balloon races, and in 1936 was Navy meteorological officer on the airship Hindenburg.

The Weather Bureau is a complex organization, whose many duties were set forth by Congress in the following manner:

"The chief shall have charge of forecasting the weather, the issue of storm warnings, the display of weather and flood signals for the benefit of agriculture, commerce and navigation; the guaging and reporting of rivers, the maintenance and operation of seacoast telegraph lines and the collection and transmission of marine intelligence for the benefit of commerce and navigation, the reporting of temperature and rainfall conditions for the cotton interests, the display of frost, cold wave and other signals; the distribution of meteorological information in the interest of agriculture and commerce, and the taking of such meteorological observations as may be necessary to establish and record the climatic conditions of the United States, etc."

Definitions are in order here. Meteorology is the science of the earth's atmosphere. It includes both climate and weather. Climate is concerned with statistics and deals with the normal or average state of such elements as barometric pressure, temperature, humidity, cloudiness, precipitation (snow, rain, hail), sunshine, visibility and wind velocity (direction and speed). The state of these elements at a given time and place, or during a particular period, and in a specified region, is what constitutes weather.

Main Offices In Capital

Forecasting the weather is, of course, the best known of the bureau's activities, and is done in six forecast centers at Chicago, New Orleans, Jacksonville, Denver, San Francisco and Washington. One thousand, one hundred observation stations send data twice a day to these centers and 5,000 more "co-operative stations" make records which they mail in monthly, mostly for use in the 42 climatological centers. Likewise, some ships send current reports and others mail in records of voyages.

Head offices of the Weather Bureau as well as the forecasting center for this area are located in the red building at Twenty-fourth and M streets. Every morning and evening at 7:30 recorders assemble in the Forecast Room, a fairly large and old-fashioned room with a bay window to the east and dark woodwork. But the lamps are modern and light every fraction of an inch of the charts on the high slanted desks at which the men work. The principal desk stretches down the center of the room, with lamps in the center and three men sitting before the slanting tops of either side and another man at the end farthest from the door. At the other end of the room are two long tables, and the day I was there a man worked silently at each one, while another sat at a table in the bay. On the west wall is another high desk with its lamps and three positions for chart-markers.

Naturally, the public is not allowed here. To begin with, there is not enough space, and then outsiders would slow up the work and lower the efficiency of the personnel, and therefore could not be permited to interrupt a task where speed and accuracy are dominant factors. Even the picture which The Post photographer made and which is reproduced on this page had to be done after the actual recording was finished, for nothing can be allowed to interrupt this work morning and night every day in the year.

It takes a little while for an observer to become accustomed to the scene and the activities. There is absolute quiet. Even the sharpeners for the many pencils seem to have silencers. The only sound is the voice of the man at the head of the large desk, reading steadily and rapidly. At first I could not understand what he was saying, but then I could hear names of towns and cities, figures and abbreviations and other words relating to weather. It is not at all monotonous, for he is skilled in this important work, but the speed never slackens because he must dictate all the data from 430 stations within an hour!

How to Read Code Reports

Not only does he do this, but he translates every report from the code in which it is sent, and even this does not make him pause. The only interruptions may be a request for data from a place not ordinarily noted. Because of the expense and length of time required to send the necessarily long messages, an alphabetical code was worked out years ago and is used entirely. It is simple and easily learned, I am told. Here it is:

a— 2 or partly cloudy
e— 4 or cloudy
i— 6 or rain
o— 8 or snow
u and y— 9 or clear
b—10 or north
d—20 or northeast
f—30 or east
g—40 or southeast
m—50 or south
n—60 or southwest
r—70 or west
s—80 or northwest

PORTLAND RUEBASH DOGBANES DEBUTANT ODDITY ONE SEDENTARY YUSSIF CLADONIA AYYSU means 29.70 inches of pressure. Temperature 10 degrees (at 7:30). Northeast snow, 12 miles per hour. Pressure characteristic rising unsteadily to extent of four-hundredths of an inch. Minimum temperature 10 degrees. Dew point 8 degrees. Maximum temperature 26 degrees. 1.24 inches of precipitation. 8 inches of snow on the ground. Slouds 8 minus stratus from northeast. Portland.

With several pencils in hand the men note down everything being read. One works on a full weather chart. Another works on a 12-hour pressure change chart which helps to analyze the weather chart more clearly. There is a 24-hour temperature change chart; a cloud chart indicating the kinds, the amount and their direction of movement; an upper air chart which they are able to fill out with data on each 2,000-foot level up to 14,000 feet. Two charts show airplane recordings of pressure, temperature and humidity up to 17,000-foot levels and radio sound observations made by radio transmissions between the 17,000 and 75,000 foot levels. And there is a chart of the whole Northern Hemisphere.

The reader is taking his material from sheets of telegrams and teletype which come from the wire room below in a tiny dumbwaiter about a foot square, which is right behind him. High on the wall above is a clock which they watch as closely as train dispatcher or newspaper editor, and below there is a clock-like face which has the points of the compass and gives the wind direction. In a corner space partly off the room, two men at a tilted bank place the type for the daily table on the weather map right in the form, following the dictation, so that when it is finished the table is all ready for printing also.

Shortly after 9 o'clock the forecaster on duty, who has been working on the charts, studying them, finally starts dictating the forecast for immediate distribution. There are three forecasters here, and they usually work a month at a time on both morning and night forecasts, since it would not be feasible for more than one at a time to keep a steady knowledge of the weather trends. They are studying and working constantly, and the quickness of this particular phase is only accomplished through long experience and only done because of necessity.

How Weather Data Is Disseminated

Then begins the dissemination of the data and forecast. Almost all the daily newspapers in this country publish the weather reports, and soon after they are available telephone inquiries start. Certain places receive them by commercial telegraph or Government teletype. In addition, 2,000 copies of the daily weather map are mailed from this forecast center alone. At 10 a. m. and p. m. the bureau makes a radio broadcast which is called the marine-angot bulletin for ships, and which is picked up by the French Meteorological Service which rebroadcasts to 22 other services. At 8 a. m. and p. m. there are broadcasts for aviation and commerce. The synoptic (yes, derived from synopsis) weather maps or charts were worked out first, it is believed by H. W. Brandes in Europe in 1820.

Wide benefits are exercised by the Weather Bureau every week in the year. Sudden cold waves such as we have had here last month bring warnings which cause the gas company to turn more gas into its mains for the increased consumption of heaters and stoves. Oyster dealers increase their reserves if possible. Ice factories decrease their output (there are still many of these despite the development of mechanical refrigeration.) Dredging of sand and gravel is stopped as is work in concrete. Greenhouses require special attention and preparations are made for more heat; and bus and stret car companies "turn on the heat" too. All lighting and heating concerns arrange for increased demands on their facilities. Fire hydrants, general plumbing and exposed mains are protected and watched, and stockyards drain their mains in places like Chicago. Antifreeze solutions go in the automobiles.

Marine navigation is affected at all times by the weather and reports are scanned carefully. In addition to knowledge of storms, fogs, and general conditions at sea, its services are used in disputes of admiralty law, settlement of commercial claims, and for the study of world trade. The close relation of conditions at sea and on land is constantly borne in mind and studied.

Storm warnings receive particular attention from all shipping and other maritime interests. In this hemisphere the area around the West Indies produces some ripsnorters that are special headaches for the forecaster. Storms can move so fast that in 12 hours from one forecast to another all sorts of things may have happened that could not be foreseen. Twelve hours before the 1938 New England hurricane hit, it was off Florida. Just consider that it takes a minimum of 24 hours to get from New York City to Palm Beach by express train—and try to gauge the problems of the forecaster, with an uncertain mass of storm raising the dickens out over the ocean where there would be few observers, and the necessity of saying "where it's going from here."

Writer's Sympathies With Weatherman

After all, we've had hundreds of thousands of years of weather—and do you remember two days of weather exactly alike the whole 24 hours, or did you ever see two clouds absolutely identical? Do you remember two rains or two snows which began and ended at exactly the same minute? No? I thought not. And so, you see, the forecaster cannot turn to a record book, find the conditions with an index, and refer to any precedent.

Personally, my sympathies are with the weatherman, although I don't think he needs them so much. The forecasts check up from 85 to 90 per cent, and that's a wonderful average for anything done at least 730 times a year. Unfortunately, we are too inclined to recall the exception when a storm came up suddenly and ruined the picnic, or you wore your galoshes, raincoat and umbrella to the office and had to lug them home on a hot, bright afternoon.

Let the individual say what he will, but industry and commerce are eternally grateful for this Federal service. Sailings of tremendous numbers of ships are scheduled by the warnings, especially during the warmer months from June to November. Forecasters must glow when they're told that hurricane warnings kept ships in ports and saved cargoes worth $30,000,000.

Storm warnings are displayed at more than 400 points on the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf Coasts as well as on the Great Lakes. There is a flag system for daytime and lanterns for night. Radio sounds the tocsin repeatedly and urgently.

Inland—telephone, telegraph, newspapers, radio, mails, flags and lanterns are used in warning of the approach of a storm or cold wave. Not only are lives in danger, but livelihoods are imperiled. It is known that by warning of a coming wave, $3,500,000 worth of property has been saved. Warnings are of inestimable value to people who raise fruits, sugar, tobacco, or are in the market-gardening business.

Railroad companies keep a steady watch of weather reports, and shipments of all perishable goods are rushed to their destination. If this is not possible they are switched into covered sides to avoid extreme heat or cold.

Here in Washington we still remember the big flood. Did you know that it was the Weather Bureau which, through frequent and careful observations, was able to say where the peaks would be and at what hour the flood crest would reach this city? The bureau maintains a wide river and flood service which has been of wonderful assistance in the recent tremendous floods.

And did you think that all the Weather Bureau could do to help in the forest fire situation is to say when rain may be expected? Not a bit, for by observing the winds, strong high temperatures and low humidity readings, it is possible to warn forest rangers of that combination which practically invites quickly spreading conflagrations and tremendous losses. This work is done in co-operation with the Forestry Service, timber and forestry associations.

The aerological work of the Weather Bureau is at once for the benefit of the airways and also for research of the upper air regions.

Many Requests For Information

The climatological data from the thousands of stations are used to answer the numerous requests for information, such as that concerned with agriculture and the feasibility of growing certain crops. Records of rainfalls, especially excessive ones, are used by engineers in planning irrigation systems, in designing sewerage systems and developing means for sufficient supplies of city water. When building high structures, architects and engineers examine closely the data on winds, particularly frequency and intensity of gusts.

Working closely in conjunction with the hydrographic office of the Navy Department, the Weather Bureau supplies a large amount of the material which comes out in the pilot charts.

A large part of the bureau's work is concerned with instruments. There is constant research to develop new ones and improve those now in use. None of the work of the bureau is static, for constant research and study are going on in every line. Men at the centers and stations are experts, but they know there is always more to learn and they must train others for the work, too.

But you are not wrong in quoting the old saying about the wyather. "A ring around the moon means rain" is true because cirrus clouds do portend unsettled weather. "Red sky at night, sailors delight; red sky at dawning, sailors take warning" is a jingle, yes, but also the result of day-in and day-out observations of sailors dependent on the weather for their business and, yes, their lives. "Mares tails" as an expression to describe weather conditions is not unfounded because the movements of the air masses affect the cloud formations. But even the oldtimers pick up the paper or turn on the radio and ask "what does the weatherman say?"

Aranha Leads Array of Royalty and Statesmen to Visit Here This Year

Another interesting chapter in the "good neighbor" relations which have existed between the United States and Brazil for a century will be begun next week, when Dr. Oswaldo Aranha arrives in Washington to confer with President Roosevelt. The Chief Executive of the United States and the Foreign Minister of Brazil will discuss "various questions of great importance," but their conversation is expected to center principally on Nazi-Fascist economic and cultural penetration of South America and possible methods for combatting such intervention.

Under the influence of Dr. Aranha (at right), a warm admirer of the United States, the ties between Washington and Rio de Janeiro have been greatly strengthened in the last few years, especially during the present Administration of President Getulio Vargas, Brazil's chief executive is shown above with President Roosevelt at the time of the latter's good-will visit to Rio in 1936.

No. 2 Man of Brazil Will Arrive Thursday

Plans Discussions With Roosevelt and Hull About Various Questions of Great Importance to Both Countries

By Edward T. Folliard.

Washington opens it gates to a grand array of visiting notables this year. There will be Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth of Great Britain, Prime Minister Eamon De Valera of Eire (Ireland), Prince Olav and Princess Martha of Norway and Foreign Minister Oswaldo Aranha of the United States of Brazil. The last named will be the first to arrive, and, with all honor to the others, his visit is regarded as the most important politically.

Dr. Aranha, No. 2 man of Brazil, comes here Thursday to discuss with President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull "various questions of great importance." What these are has not been announced officially, but there is no secret as to the goal in mind. It is to combat further the Nazi-Fascist economic and cultural penetration of Latin America.

Trade undoubtedly will be discussed. Employing her barter system, Germany has enormously increased her trade with Brazil, and is running the United States a neck-and-neck race for that country's market.

National defense also may be on the agenda. Rumors that Great Britain may allow Germany to acquire colonies on the western coast of Africa, opposite Brazil, have caused plenty of worry in Rio de Janeiro. The thought of Nazi air and naval bases so near at hand has been a disturbing one here, too.

Warm Friend Of United States

Dr. Aranha probably will be first in a veritable parade of Latin American leaders to Washington, and in that case another and important chapter is about to be added to the record of Uncle Sam's "good neighbor" policy.

That Dr. Aranha should head the parade is a particularly happy circumstance.

On his record, this tall, sauve and brilliant diplomat of 45 is perhaps the warmest friend the United States has in Latin America. His affection, originally based on the traditional friendship between Brazil and the United States, became a deep and personal emotion when he came here as Brazil's Ambassador in 1934 for a three-year sojourn.

Washington soon discovered that he was not only a charming individual, but a remarkable one. He could speak virtually no English when he arrived, but within a few months, thanks to assiduous study, he was talking it fluently—idioms and all.

Having accomplished that much, he decided to find out something about the country. Traveling by automobile, he went on a thorough "educational tour," ranging from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. Ultimately he knew more about the United States than 99 out of 100 of its natives.

He went to both the Republican and Democratic national conventions in 1936, and he later deftly summed up their philosophies as follows:

"At Cleveland the Republicans promised Santa Claus to both the rich and the poor, while at Philadelphia, the Democrats promised Santa Claus to the poor with the rich man's money."

He Won $1,500 On Kentucky Derby

That same year, Dr. Aranha, a great horse enthusiast, went to the Kentucky Derby, picked Bold Venture, a long shot, and won $1,500.

He smokes on an average of 80 cigarettes a day, lighting one from the other. In Portuguese, the language of Brazil, Aranha means spider, and so the distinguished owner of that name has a spider embroidered on his shirts, underwear and pajamas, and engraved on his cigarette case.

He was born in Rio Grande de Sul, studied at the Military College of Rio de Janeiro and later at the swank Ecole des Hautes in Paris. Peturning to his native city of Alegrete, he practiced law, became interested in politics, and took part in five revolutions. He was wounded twice. Once a part of his heel was shot away, and he still carries a bullet in his shoulder.

Insisted on Strengthening Brazil-U. S. Bonds

But the most unpleasant experience he ever had, he has said, was on August 13, 1936, here in Washington. His automobile became unmanageable, jumped a curb in Georgetown, and injured two children. He felt terrible about the accident, and made no attempt to claim diplomatic immunity when the police arrived.

"I want to be treated exactly like an American citizen," he said.

Dr. Aranha moved into a position of power after the revolution of 1930, in which he backed Getulio Vargas, Brazil's 56-year-old President of today. In November, 1937, while Dr. Aranha was here, President Vargas, in a bloodless coup, dissolved all legislative bodies, promulgated a new constitution and assumed dictatorial powers. Berlin and Rome were delighted, seeing in Vargas' act a spread of fascism to South America.

Aranha Becomes Foreign Minister

Dr. Aranha, a stanch Democrat, left Washington for Rio shortly afterward. What he told Vargas is not a matter of public record, but there is no doubt that he threatened to divorce himself from the government unless Vargas moderated his course. He also is said to have insisted on a strengthening of the ties between Brazil and the United States. The upshot of the conference was that Aranha agreed to take over the post of foreign minister.

What has happened in the interval has been a sad story, viewed from the standpoint of Hitler and Mussolini, who thought they saw in Vargas a brother dictator back in November, 1937.

Last April President Vargas issued a decree banning Nazi activities—and all other similar activities—in Brazil. It forbade public demonstrations and political activities by foreigners and placed their schools, newspapers and propaganda enterprises under regulation.

The decree came shortly after the German Embassy in Rio had published a defense of what it called the right of Germans to cultivate their own political theories in Brazil.

The Vargas decree—and this was significant in view of what was going on—further forbade foreigners, whether in an official or unofficial capacity, from coercing their compatriots in Brazil into adhering to a foreign political viewpoint through promises of threats. There are something like 500,000 persons of German blood in Brazil. However, the great majority of these are Brazilian citizens, many of them of the second or third generations, who have broken all ties with the old country. The Vargas ukase against coercion was designed to halt attempts by the professional Nazis to harass these people into forming a pro-Hitler bloc in the country.

Berlin Press Abuses Vargas

Berlin made desperate efforts to have Brazil relax its treatment of the Nazis, but Foreign Minister Aranha flatly rejected its representations. Thereafter the Berlin press, which once had glorified President Vargas, loosed a broadside of abuse at him, much in the manner that it is now assailing President Roosevelt.

Relations between Brazil and Germany got no better as time went on. Last October Brazil bluntly informed the Reich that she "did not desire the return of Dr. Karl Ritter to his post as Ambassador to Rio de Janeiro." The Reich promptly reciprocated with the flat demand that Jose Moniz de Aragao leave his Berlin post.

As everybody now knows, there was never any reason for mentioning the Vargas dictatorship in the same breath with the Hitler and Mussolini dictatorships. There are no concentration camps or firing squads in Brazil. In fact, capital punishment is outlawed.

A friendly, tolerant people, Brazilians would appear to be very unlikely prospects for an ideology based on hate, racial discrimination and neo-paganism. Brazil has a polyglot population that includes millions descended from African slaves. No color line is drawn there. In Rio a popular saying is, "There are no minorities in the New World." Moreover, Brazil is overwhelmingly Catholic, and her beloved Cardinal Leme never misses an opportunity to condemn racial and religious propaganda.

U. S. First to Recognize Brazil

The friendship between Brazil and the United States transcends mere diplomatic amity. This is made clear to all North Americans who visit the big nation to the south.

It is a friendship that goes back to the beginning of Brazil's history as an independent nation. When Brazil broke away from Portugal more than 100 years ago, the United States was the first to recognize her.

Calls Relations Model for Others

"We Brazilians have never forgotten that," Foreign Minister Aranha recently told Dr. Joseph F. Thorning, according to an article the latter wrote for The Post. "At the time of the Civil War, President Lincoln said that if the need for mediation should arise Brazil would be the first nation he would welcome in the role of mediator.

"During the Spanish-American War, Brazil supplied three warships to the United States. These gunboats fought in the battle of Manila Bay under Admiral Dewey. Finally, during the World War, as soon as the United States saw fit to engage in hostilities, Brazil proclaimed to the world that she could no longer remain neutral.

"That is a clear picture of our attitude and feeling today. The union of hearts and minds between our nations has never been closer. Indeed, it furnishes a model for imitation. If the same spirit could be evoked in Europe it would provide the era of co-operation and good will so earnestly desired by the masses of the people."

The United States appears to have been fortunate in its selection of ambassadors to Rio. The late Ambassador Edwin V. Morgan represented this country there for a quarter of a century, and his final act was one that Brazilians will always cherish. In his will, he asked to be buried in the soil of Brazil.

Trade Relations Are Excellent

There also happens to be a practical aspect to the cordial relations between the two countries. The United States is Brazil's best customer. In fact, Brazil is one country which sells us more than she buys.

In the last 11 months of 1938 the United States bought goods valued at $88,746,000 from Brazil and sold goods to her valued at $55,206,000. More than half of that import total was accounted for by coffee. Other items purchased from Brazil were cocoa beans, hides and skins, manganese and Brazil nuts.

United States exports to Brazil consist principally of automobiles and accessories, gasoline and lubricating oil, agriculture machinery, aircraft and radio apparatus.

If Germany and Italy turn covetous eyes on Brazil, it is with good reason. The third largest country in the world, with an area larger than the United States (exclusive of Alaska) by 250,000 square miles and with a population of only 45,000,000, Brazil has untapped resources that are enough to cause the have-not dictators to water at the mouth. Two million square miles that are not even being used! And within that area untold wealth—iron, lumber and, most likely, oil.

That explains why Nazi Germany, swallowing all the rebuffs, continues to court Brazil over the radio, in millions of pamphlets and through the news service which she distributes to Brazilian newspapers gratis.

Rumor Germany May Get Base in Western Africa Is Disturbing to Rio de Janeiro; Trade Also to Be Consideration

Natchez Will Open Historic Homes To Visitors March 4

Natchez, in the heart of the Old South, will open its ante-bellum mansions to visitors to the eighth pilgrimage of the Garden Clubs, March 4 to April 2. The period is to perpetuate the hospitality and traditions of the city on the Mississippi.

Stately homes in perfect Colonial architecture reminiscent of Mount Vernon or of Old Charleston welcome visitors during the "open-house" period and here one may admire the interior decorations which, in some instances, remain virtually unchanged since 1845. Monmouth, built in 1818; Arlington, in 1816; Windy Hill Manor, where, in 1807, Aaron Burr awaited his trial for treason; King's Tavern, an old hostelry; Inglewood, a picturesque Mississippi version of Virginia Colonial design; or Homewood, with four great columns supporting its two-story portico, are among the homes to be visited in Natchez.

Through wide portals may be seen curved archways, leading to broad, winding staircases, and, in retrospect, one may visualize dashing Confederate cavalry officers dancing with Southern belles, even while Grant's Army was pounding its way toward nearby Vicksburg.

Even the entrance to Natchez suggests something distinctive, for the railway enjoys the name of Yazoo & Mississippi Valley. Tri-weekly, all-expense tours are scheduled and a through sleeper on the Illinois Central, connecting from the East by way of the Baltimore & Ohio via Cincinnati, carries the travelers from Memphis to Natchez for a visit to the city overlooking the levees of "Old Man River." Those desiring to may continue to New Orleans, through the cotton lands of Mississippi, returning home through Memphis and Louisville.

Republican Possibilities for 1940

By Mark Sullivan.

The magazine Fortune prints the results of a poll about Republican Presidential possibilities. It asked a large number of persons—selected from the general public—not Republicans alone— the following question: "Regardless of your own party affiliation, which of the following men would be your choice to get the Republican nomination for President in 1940?"

The names on the list and the respective percentages received by each were:

Dewey	12.2
LaGuardia	11.5
Vandenberg	11.5
Landon	8.2
Hoover	5.1
Lodge	4.6
Nye	4.1
Barton	2.8
Others	2.0

The biggest percentage of all, 38, was received by nobody—that is, 38 per cent of the persons asked answered: "Don't know."

When my eye fell on that list I felt that some one could make some money—or lose some—by making various bets based on the list. As to at least two names on the list—I won't say which—it would be safe to bet 100 to 1 they won't get the nomination. Indeed, it would be safe to bet that neither of those two will have 20 delegates out of the convention's some 1,100.

One quite reasonable and practicable bet would be—I don't undertake to say what the odds should be—that no one in that list will get the nomination. A person who knows the art of luring other persons into betting should be able to get odds on that. The unsophisticated would suppose that such a list of Presidential possibilities as this, supposed to be comprehensive, would contain the name of the nominee.

BUT THIS LIST is seriously incomplete. It omits at least two of the strongest possibilities. The reason for these omissions I learned when I read the text of Fortune's article. The editors explain: "The new names that popped out of the ballot boxes in November—a Taft, a Saltonstall, a Vanderbilt—were omitted on the theory that they are not yet well enough known nationally to be in Presidential focus."

But it is precisely some of those names "that popped out in November" who are most to the front. One of the names that has an excellent chance is not even among the three whom Fortune mentions as having "popped out in November." This quite promising name is not mentioned by Fortune in any connection.

During the last three months, I, like most newspaper men, have sat with scores of informal groups who discussed the perennial subject, politics, and discussed specifically the possibilities for the Republican nomination in 1940. This kind of talk, as politicians talk it, does not aim, primarily, toward picking the man who would be a better President than any other; nor even primarily toward picking the one who would make the best candidate. These factors are taken into account. But the primary aim of such talk is toward rating the relative chances of men to get the nomination—the chances taking into account all sorts of expediencies and accidents of fortune.

IN EVERY GROUP that I have heard talk, the majority judgment, strictly limited as of today, is that the nomination—again, as of today—tends to hover over Ohio. It hovers over Ohio partly because of the State's location—not merely its geographical location, but its position in the gamut of American political thought, and its political history. Another factor is that Ohio is a pivotal State. The rule, broken only once since the Civil War, is that if the Republicans carry Ohio, they carry the Nation. Hence the desirability of a candidate who comes from Ohio, who therefore is popular in the State and presumably can carry it.

Out of 13 candidates the Republican Party has had since the Civil War, 5 have been picked from Ohio. Whenever Ohio has promising material, Ohio is strongly in the picture. And, as it happens, Ohio this time has two men who are promising material. Both are men who "popped out of the ballot boxes in November." One is Robert A. Taft, elected Republican Senator; the other is John W. Bricker, elected Republican Governor.

As between Senator Taft and Gov. Bricker—that is, as between being a Senator and being a Governor—each office carries some advantages and some liabilities. Mr. Taft, as Senator, will be in the public eye for two years; that will give him opportunity to impress himself on the national mind. That is an advantage, assuming the man has the kind of quality that will bear acquaintance and inspection—as Mr. Taft assuredly has.

BUT THAT ADVANTAGE carries with it a liability. Mr. Taft will have to vote on practically every question and roll call that comes up. Presumably practically all his votes will be wise and will make friends for him. Inevitably, however, each vote will make some opponents and critics. Whatever the question be, there will be some voters, including some Republican voters, on the side Mr. Taft votes against.

Mr. Bricker, as Governor of Ohio, will be out of the public eye, excepting within his own State—he will have less chance to get the acquaintance of the country. By the same condition he will be free from the necessity of taking positions on all sorts of public questions. If he makes an exceptionally good Governor, news of his accomplishments will flow out of the State and to some extent win him acquaintance and favor.

Gov. Bricker has started out in a way that fits the mood of the country. Within some two weeks after he took office in January, he had pared several hundreds of employes off the public pay roll, had reduced the expenses of the State by millions. As I write, I do not know the figures of Gov. Bricker's economy up to date, but they are impressive. This is the sort of record that commends a Governor to the present prevailing mood of the people, both in the State and throughout the Nation.

WHAT I AM SAYING HERE is merely that decidedly, most decidedly, Senator Taft and Gov. Bricker must be added to the list of Republican Presidential possibilities that Fortune compiled and that I have reprinted above. I speak as of today. The list, with my additions, may in a few months become incomplete, just as Fortune's list, made up of men who were possibilities before the November election, became obsolete after the election.

There is no election ahead, between now and the Republican National Convention in June, 1940, to add new names from that source. But some new man in Congress, in either House or Senate, may make a name. Some old member may come forward as an expression of new Republican vitality. Some Governor, other than the ones mentioned by Fortune or me, may make an appealing record. I think decidedly that the name of Gov. Arthur H. James, of Pennsylvania, ought to be on any list of Republican possibilities.

Chamberlain's Umbrella Means Safety to Britons

Black Silk Umbrella Is More Useful as Symbol Than as Something to Keep Rain Off

By Frank Kelley.

London.

Neville Chamberlain's black silk umbrella, which has a personality all its own as one of the most famous bits of stage property in diplomatic history, has never been unfurled to shield its owner from the elements.

Known affectionately as "Mein Gamp," a Cockney pun at Hitler's expense, the umbrella cost Mr. Chamberlain 57 shillings and 6 pence (about $12.50 at current exchange), a high price as far as most umbrellas go. He has had his money's worth; the umbrella's publicity value has been incalculable, adding as it did a homely, British touch to the Prime Minister's peripatetic search for appeasement, first at Berchtesgaden, next at Godesberg, then at Munich and lately at Rome.

On all sides Mr. Chamberlain has been pictured as a modern St. George setting out to conquer Fascist dragons with but the homely implement of steel, silk and wood clutched in his hands.

Considered a Symbol of Safety

Chamberlain's umbrella has become a symbol of safety to anxious Britions, comparable with the magic, sedative effect which pictures of Stanley Baldwin puffing contentedly at a cherrywood pipe used to have in moments of crisis.

For a time Chamberlain was known as a bird-watcher. That hobby proved too effete to catch on with the public. Next he tried fishing in Scotland's rushing streams, but found that the late Calvin Coolidge and Franklin D. Roosevelt had beaten him to it. Nothing could compete with a smiling shot of President Roosevelt tilted in a deck chair somewhere in the Gulf Stream.

Finally, he fell back upon the commonplace, an umbrella, that painfully dull article of everyday use in Britain, without which even on the sunniest of days no Englishman can appear and claim to be well or completely dressed.

"Quite accidental," chirped the Prime Minister's friends. "Stroke of sheer genius," rasped the cynics.

Whatever it was, Chamberlain has his umbrella and never deserts it. It is the favorite one of three, all of which he purchased many years ago at the shop of Thomas Briggs & Sons, near St. James' Palace.

"It's what one might call a Rolls-Royce of an umbrella, sir," one of Briggs' men explained. "Natty, but quiet; solid, but light—er, the sort of umbrella which becomes part of a man, if I may say so!"

Briggs is one of those old-time London shops that keep a dossier on anything you purchase. In Mr. Chamberlain's case, however, no one seems to know the exact date. The records do show that it has been re-covered many times, always in the finest, heavy, black silk. Every stitch is hand-sewn and every hinge in the frame is hand-riveted.

The most expensive umbrella in the shop costs $105. Mr. Chamberlain fondled one of those when he came in just before Munich to have his famous one re-covered. He always takes his own umbrella to be mended and while waiting turns the flashier ones over and over in their racks. Resisting temptation, he walks out still faithful to his less expensive model.

Briggs' men wonder just why Mr. Chamberlain ever wants his pet umbrella re-covered. Every time they get to work on it they find it so tightly wrapped that they consider it proof positive it has never been opened since the last time. Some Englishmen have their umbrellas ironed after furlin; Mr. Chamberlain hasn't gone this far yet.

When it rains, Briggs' men figure, Mr. Chamberlain whips open one of his two other umbrellas, which are kept as understudies at 10 Downing street.

Nicaragua Canal Project Revived Again

Vulnerability of Panama Canal Turns Attention To Atlantic Route

By Henry N. Lepidus.
Associated Press Staff Writer.

The interest of foreign spies in the Panama Canal has turned some official thoughts again to the possibilities of an interocean waterway across the jungles of Nicaragua. The project for another mid-American water route between the oceans there has been discussed by governments since gold-seeking forty-niners crossed Nicaragua in their rush to California.

Secretary Woodring's admonitions that the Panama Canal must be made "impregnable"—involving possible construction of a new $200,000,000 set of locks—had led Congressional proponents of a Nicaragua canal to repeat their arguments for construction of a supplementary waterway. In 1938, President Roosevelt indicated the Administration had no immediate interest in the project.

Difficulties Before Building

The "forty-niners" who first used the Nicaraguan route landed at Greytown (San Juan Del Norte), sailed up the wild 120-mile San Juan River to Lake Nicaragua, 70 miles across that deep alligator-infested body of water, to a small port near the town or Rivas, and continued overland on muleback across a narrow strip of hill country to the Pacific Coast.

Before the Panama Canal was built, the Nicaragua ruote for many years was considered the most likely one; and it was the subject of lively discussion between Great Britain and the United States;. which led in 1850 to the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty assuring each nation equal rights in any canal across Central America. This pact was abrogated in 1901, however, by the Hay-Pauncefote accord. In 1916 after the Panama Canal was in operation, the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty with Nicaragua gave the United States for $3,000,000 a 99-year option on a canal route across the more northern country.

Difficulties confronting the building of a Nicaragua Canal are of three kinds—political, topographical and climatic.

There have been indications that sectors of Latin American opinion might like to see the matter made a basis for abrogating the Bryan-Chamorro pact. The late Nicaragua rebel leader, Augusto Cesar Sandino, desired a canal built as an inter-American project, apparently excluding the United States, and asked a Latin American parley at Buenos Aires to discuss this possibility.

Construction of a Nicaraguan canal also would involve negotiations with Costa Rica. The San Juan River skirts Nicaragua's southern border for a considerbale distance, and nine-tenths of its water reaches the Caribbean Sea by cutting across the northeastern Costa Rican jungles. An agreement was signed by the United States and Costa Rica in 1923 to open negotiations regarding construction of an interoceanic canal, but it still is pending before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

As for physical difficulties, the Army Engineers obtained a full idea of their nature in making a 1931 survey. In the 12-mile western section between the lake and Brito, an open roadstead on the Pacific, the builders would have to dig through a hilly and comparatively dry region.

Seventy miles of the route eastward would lie across Lake Nicaragua to San Carlos, a village of 500 population, where the San Juan River drains off the waters of the lake. The only signs of human life between San Carlos and the Caribbean are Castillo, population 200, dominated by a ruined Spanish fort of colonial appearance, and Greytown, with 300 inhabitants. At Castillo are rock-strewn rapids where the currents are so treacherous that only a man who had spent his whole life on that stream could be trusted to take a motor launch through.

At intervals along the wide, usually placid stream a clearing appears, with a thatched house and a small planting of banana trees.

North of Greytown, men sometimes had to work in waist-deep mud to operate the diamond drills and carry on other operations essential to the survey. Huge alligators doze in the sun along the San Juan River; and Juguars and snakes lurk there. Of the latter, the most deadly is the Fer-De-Lance and the rare Bushmaster.

WHAT NEXT FOR SPAIN?

The Spanish civil war, which began on July 17, 1936, is rapidly nearing its end, most experts agree. The military situation of the loyalists is desperate, as the Catalonian remnant of their army retreats before Gen. Franco's victorious insurgents toward the French border, and the lack of munitions and supplies seriously hampers further resistance in the south.

With an insurgent triumph almost inevitable, Europe watches anxiously to see how a Fascist Spain will fit into the international picture. Will Gen. Franco be able to "pay off" Italy and Germany for their help in the civil war with money which the British would be glad to loan him for that purpose? Or will Hitler and Mussolini demand—and get—trade concessions, and military bases from which to operate against France, and against French and British shipping in the Mediterranean?

The map above shows Spanish points of strategic importance, indicates where the country's agricultural and mineral riches are to be found, and lists the most dramatic events of the war which has divided Spain for two and one-half years.

Firms Serving King 'On Trial' UntilDecember

Cannot Say George VI Buys From Them Until He Has for 3 Years

Special Correspondence of The Post.

LONDON.

One thousand London tradesmen who serve Buckingham Palace are "on trial" this year. By December they will know whether King George and Queen Elizabeth are satisfied customers and, most important, whether their shops can display the royal arms with the underline, "By Appointment to His (or Her) Majesty."

The insignia represents a distinction valuable not only for reasons of prestige but for the additional business it almost always draws. Permission to proclaim their services to reigning royalty are accorded only to firms which have served the King for at least three years. In December the King will have completed his third year on the throne Years of service to George VI while he was Duke of York do not count, except for warrants awarded by the keeper of the privy purse, Maj. Sir Ulrick Alexander. Thirty-four of these have already been granted to firms that served the King before his accession. He has at present a tobacconist, phonograph and radio purveyor, optician, photographic specialist, athletic outfitter, hairdresser and laundry.

The laundry is also used by the Queen, who has granted 31 warrants through her lord chamberlain, the Earl of Airlie. They are held by a hairdresser (different from the King's), a pinmaker, several purveyers of household equipment such as china and glassware, furniture and fabrics, her own dressmaker, tailor, milliner, shoemaker, furrier and glove shop. Several of the Queen's warrants have been granted to shops where she makes purchases for her children, Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret Rose, such as toy and doll manufacturers, makers of educational playthings, supplier of nurses' uniforms and a candy store.

Canada Links Arms Program To U. S. Defense Preparations

Pacific Coast Being Fortified As Co-operative Measure; but Controversy Arises Over Alaska Highway

By D. M. Halliday.

Toronto, Feb. 4.—Clearer evidence that Canada's defense plans and policies are being integrated with those of Great Britain and the United States is to be read between the lines in news reports from the capitals of the three nations.

Manufacture of warplanes for Britain in the United States finds its counterpart in Canada, where orders also are being filled for planes to be flown across the Atlantic, with the difference that British types are being constructed in this country. In addition to those for overseas delivery, 83 similar modern bombing and fighting craft are scheduled for delivery to the Royal Canadian Air force in the Dominion's arms budget now before Parliament.

Emphasis is being placed on increased air protection and further extension of coastal defenses, and $6,000,000 will be expended during the coming year on the training of pilots, the R. C. A. F. personnel being enlarged by 231 officers and men bringing the total of Canada's army pilots up to 2,445.

Fortifying Pacific Coast Area

The long Pacific Coast area between Washington State and Alaska is being elaborately fortified, with the United States fleet being regarded as the first line of defense, backed by a Canadian link in the chain of inner defenses extending from Panama to the Aleutian Islands. Expenditures, estimated in the House of Commons by Defense Minister Ian Mackenzie for British Columbia construction, include $229,000 for the Vancouver air station, $654,000 for another air base at Patricia Bay on Vancouver Island, $48,000 for additional work on the seaplane base at Ailford Bay on Queen Charlotte Island, $27,000 for Kamloops magazine and $327,000 for the base at Prince Rupert, farther north on the coast.

The Ailford Bay Base will be equipped with modern planes capable of attacking sea raiders. Heavy guns are being set up at the northern end of Vancouver Island to guard against an enemy fleet atack down the west coast of the island. Other guns at the Victoria end will be placed to command the Straits of Juan de Fuca so that in co-operation with batteries near Seattle, a curtain of fire could be drawn across the straits in the event of an attack from that direction on the cities of Victoria, Vancouver or Seattle. Floating seaplane bases consisting of large scows, fitted with workshops and fuel supplies are being constructed to be used as service stations for reconnaisance planes.

While increased power in its air arm is the major aim of the defense department, additional naval expenditures provide a measure of support for any British or United States naval operations if need should arise, as well as strengthening the small Canadian navy, ordinarily joining the British Navy's West Indies Squadron in exercises.

In addition, two new divisions are to be added to the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve and at Halifax $358,500 will be expended on the base there and $545,800 at Esquimalt, British Columbia, which is the west coast base. The total naval expenditure has been increased almost $2,000,000, to a total of $8,500,000.

National needs are underlined in the allocation of Canada's largest peace-time budget, totaling $60,000,000, but at the same time due attention has been given to making these needs interlock with others if circumstances demand.

President Sets Off National Debate on U. S. Role in World Affairs

Isolationists Hit FDR Foreign Policy

Famous Names of Wilson Era, Borah, Johnson, Clark, Lodge, Again Figure in Capitol Hill Debate on American Aid to Democracies

By Albert L. Warner.

The musketry resounds from the skirmishes in the Capital over the Administration's foreign policy. In fact, general political warfare is threatened. But one difficulty in the immediate cannonading is that there is no obvious hilltop to be captured, no fort around which the defenders and the attackers can come to grips.

When the President interrupted the firing to say, "We are against any entangling alliances, obviously," and when he denied saying that in event of European war the American frontier would lie in France, the uproar became only the more confused. Although the guns continued to echo, the apparent advance of Administration policy was turned into a withdrawal—a pattern followed by the White House on other similar occasions of stress in foreign relations.

Could there be a discussion now on a concrete specific issue the isolationists in Congress, weakened though they may have been during the last two years of provocative world events and the accumulation of domestic passions, would prove formidable opponents of the President.

The probability is that there will be no such concrete issue unless and until a major war breaks out in Europe. For the isolationists the trouble is that the issue in such an event may come too late; the circumstances attending the outbreak of a war would weaken them still further.

Famous Names In Limelight

However that may be, old leaders in the fight 20 years ago against the League of Nations are girding again for battle and among the new figures in the fight against "entanglements and commitments" are those with names which harken back to old chieftains in the same cause. With the veteran Senators William E. Borah, of Idaho, and Hiram Johnson, of California, are the younger Senators Henry Cabot Lodge, who follows his grandfather as a Massachusetts Senator, and Bennett Champ Clark, whose father, the Speaker of the House, was often a foe of Woodrow Wilson. Senator Clark is a Democrat; the other three are Republicans.

To the list of current Cassandras in the battle against commitments might be added, among the leaders, Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, and Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, Republicans, and Robert R. Reynolds, Democrat, of North Carolina.

The immediate cause of the tumult is the discovery of President Roosevelt's personal aid to the French in facilitating their acquisition of war planes. On top of this have been his private meetings with Congressional committees, in which he has taken up the theme of his public remarks, emphasizing much more concretely and definitely his sympathies with the democracies, his dislike for the totalitarian states and his desire to aid the former in moral and material fashion against possible attack.

No Bar to Plane Selling to Democracies

He has linked American self-protection to the preservation of France and Great Britain. But there is no legal bar to selling airplanes to France and Great Britain, and the Administration oppositionists have no desire to test their strength on an attempt to impose such a bar.

The second possible concrete issue lies in the demand of the oppositionists that if airplanes and munitions are made available to one foreign nation they be made available to all. But there is no legal impediment to any purchaser now so long as no war exists. Unlikely to request a legal prohibition against particular countries because there is no occasion to consider it, the President remains silent, calling it an "iffy" question.

The "if" is not likely to be removed because Germany has plenty of planes and no cause to seek supplies from an American market which would be cut off by the British navy, if not by the neutrality act, in the event of war. Against Japan an effective airplane embargo is being maintained by official pressure but without statutory basis.

FDR Believes Pressure Effective

The President himself might raise a specific issue if he should demand that the neutrality act be immediately repealed or modified to give him discretion to embargo American goods as against aggressors in wartime but to make them available to the objects of aggression. Here again the issue is likely to be sidetracked because the President and his aides believe their pressure policy against aggression has become imminently effective without actually making an overt move.

Probably by calculation, certainly by actual circumstance, the President's secret conferences, the whispered accounts of his determined intentions to aid the democracies, have impressed foreign capitals for the first time with the conclusion that isolationism here has waned. The Administration is satisfied that the potent threat of American participation in aid of those who are the victims of aggression has been revised and broadcast.

Under these circumstances there is little incentive for the President to request a definite action by Congress where divisions of opinion would be emphasized for the foreign world and where a setback would be risked. He would like to see the act modified but he may continue to talk only in generalities. From the Administration viewpoint the neutrality act would probably be more easily changed after war, if it should come, had broken out.

The fact is cited that former President Hoover, in the very speech Wednesday night which called for aloofness and non-commitment and warned that Administration policy was leading toward war, declared that this country might join in European strife if the brutality of "wholesale attack were made upon women and children by the deliberate destruction of cities from the air." Should there be war in Europe, it is just such a tactic which is credited to the German and Italian strategists who are possessed of superior air strength. Against such an exhibition the State Department is sure the neutrality act would not stand up.

G. O. P. Congressmen Still Isolationist

The first skirmishes on Capital Hill have yielded consistent indications that Republican Congressmen are not ready yet to go as far as the President in giving support to one line-up in controversies abroad as against the other. To that extent the bulk of Republican strength in Congress is with the isolationists in a policy of no secrecy, no entanglements, no commitments, no taking of sides and no war involvements.

Indicating the Republican attitude is the joint statement of all the minority members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. It protested "the unneutral action and secret methods employed by the President." It specifically asserted no objection to the sale of airplanes, but adjured secrecy and political entanglement therewith. It demanded "neutrality, nonintervention and peace."

On the Senate side five Republican members of the Military Affairs Committee urged "exactly equal treatment" with regard to airplane trade. Earlier a House Republican caucus, mapping legislative policy toward the defense program, invited a clear definition of American foreign policy. The armament program should be directed, it said, "exclusively to the defense and security of the Nation rather than toward dangerous intervention in the international frictions and discords of other peoples."

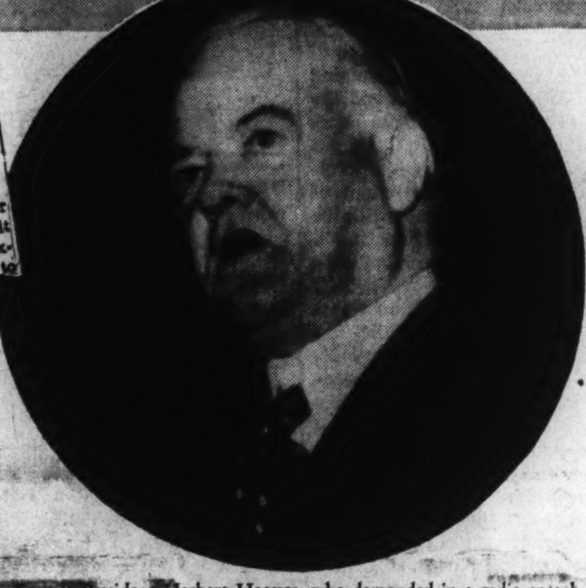
On the floor Senator Lodge introduced a resolution asking the Treasury to make public the operations of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund. The Senator said that "recent developments show how little the American people are being permitted to know about the conduct of their foreign policy."

Senator Johnson railed against secrecy and entanglement. "Good God," he said, "do you not, gentlemen, think the American people have the right to know if they are going down the road to war?"

To the cries from Capitol Hill the President retorts that charges of secrecy are bunk and that misrepresentation has attended the Capitol talk of commitments. At the head of his foreign policy the President places the declaration, "We are against any entangling alliances, obviously.'

The debatable part of the program which he announces lies in the declaration, "We are sympathetic with the peaceful maintenance of political, economic and social independence of all nations in the world." But even this is scarcely explosive unless the oppositionists find that the President is reading into it the possibility of American steps which might ultimately lead beyond the "peaceful" and into action in behalf of the independence of nations in another hemisphere.

Plainly the President is not looking for a domestic tussle over foreign policy. In effect, he asks, "What's all the shooting for?" While the isolationists will continue to be as suspicious as ever, the firing may not be as loud and concerted as it would be if a tangible target were on hand and an issue acknowledged by both sides.



Former President Herbert Hoover, who demanded in a radio speech last week that our foreign policies "be determined by the American people and the Congress, not by the President alone."

Roosevelt Hero in London; Italy Fears His Aid Will Stiffen French

British Press Praises President's Stand, but Urges English to Remember Wilson

By Joseph Driscoll.

Special Cable to The Post.

London, Feb. 4.—Franklin D. Roosevelt was lifted to a new peak of popularity in England this week when he was reported to have indicated a desire for co-operation with the democracies in the matter of armaments. Not since Woodrow Wilson led the United States into the war on the side of the Allies has any American President ever been so applauded over here as Wilson's faithful disciple, Roosevelt, was last week.

Most of the papers were careful, however, not to stress the parallel between the master and the pupil. An exception was The Daily Mail which advised its readers that Roosevelt was not all-powerful.

"Remember Wilson in the war? His word was law, his prestige enormous, his power unlimited. He crossed the Atlantic at the end of the war like a god, undisputed ruler of the United States.

"What then? Well, democracy reverses itself and turns on the man it has raised two times to great power. It happened to Wilson and there you had the unhappy spectacle of the once great man ending his days in ridicule and discredit.

"The powers given freely to the President by the American people are vast, approach those Hitler and Mussolini have taken for themselves. But there is one great difference. The American President, no matter how far his 'dictatorship' goes, is always on the end of the strings laid down in the Constitution."

In likening Roosevelt's popularity over here to Wilson's one should specify the pre-Versailles Wilson. When President Wilson went to Versailles and attempted the formidable task of living up to all the points and pledges he had enunciated in his eloquent speeches and notes, his popularity in England rapidly dropped to zero, for his altruistic crusade brought him in irreconcilable conflict with the realistic Prime Minister, David Lloyd George, and Premier Georges Clemenceau, who were busy dividing the colonies, trying to "hang the Kaiser," and squeezing Germany "until the pips squeaked."

Wants Roosevelt To Call Conference

Some of the British like Roosevelt so much and are so grateful for his promise of support in the next war, that once again there is talk of paying the old war debt when the next installment falls due in June. There is talk also of President Roosevelt being invited to London after the King and Queen visit Washington.

One of the most vocal of Mr. Roosevelt's admirers is the veteran liberal publicist, A. G. Gardiner, who implored the President to "summon a world conference to consider how peace can be preserved and on what terms world reconciliation can be secured." No other person, thinks Gardiner, can issue the invitation with the same disinterested authority, and the mere announcement of the fact would send "a thrill of hope through the world," and "shake the 'axis' to it foundation."

Would the dictators accept? Probably not, Gardiner admits, but whether they accepted or not, "the gesture would be equally decisive."

One vital difference is noted by Gardiner between the 1914 position and today. "We know and the Americans know in which camp the United States will be found if the dictators force a fight to the finish. It is this fact which should be brought into action now."

Rome Afraid President's Tactics Will Make Another 'Munich'

By James M. Minifie.

Special Cable to The Post.

Rome, Feb. 4.—From the fury which the report (since denied) of President Roosevelt's statement to the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate aroused here, it evidently upset some carefully balanced applecarts.

If it were true that the President's policy was not to be simply one of careful observation of events, but of thoroughgoing support of the democracies, it would have made almost impossible the fulfillment of Italy's "natural aspirations" by the power politics method which was crowned so conspicuously at Munich—always provided that the President did not outstrip American public opinion.

Importance of American Support

A quick glance at the position will indicate the importance of American support at the moment. The following arguments have been developed steadily here.

First, that the increasing population and the enlarged empire of Italy give her certain lawful claims against France, going even beyond those admitted by the Treaty of London, on the strength of which Italy joined the Allies.

Second, that France must satisfy these claims; otherwise Italy will be justified in using force to insure their satisfaction.

Third, that in the latter case France would be responsible for the failure to preserve peace.

These arguments are nothing but an attempt to justify in advance an armed attack upon France if France declines to stand and deliver quietly. They express openly what had hitherto been veiled, however scantily. The axis powers do not want war with England and France but apparently are prepared to risk it, counting on their finesse to enable them to repeat Munich peacefully.

U. S. Aid Would Change Situation

If it became clearly known that the democracies would enjoy thoroughgoing American support, however, the risk would become not the risk of war only, but of certain disaster, predictable and inevitable. France, on the other hand, would be encouraged to resist the application of power politics, and the axis would then be confronted with the alternative of retreat or defeat, either of which would be fatal.

Fascism does not want war. It wants the fruits of victory without war, as Nazism got them after Munich, which, as Chancellor Adolf Hitler remarked, "may serve as an example of similar reasonable settlement of other vital questions." If France declines to understand the meaning of a "reasonable settlement," then according to the weekly, "'Relazioni Internazionali," "It wil lbe for Cannon to speak."

Any attempt to oppose the speaking cannon with arguing back cannon would certainly be considered what Hitler calls "a satanic attempt to threaten the world's peace and culture."

In the long run the attitude of the United States may be decisive. The increasing publicity which has attended American sales of airplanes to Britain and France and the reported emphasis laid by President Roosevelt on the necessity of supplying the European democracies with whatever they need cannot fail to have an effect on the totalitarian general staffs.

Last Week... A Hundred Years Ago

By Joseph Reed.

National Affairs

U. S. Shuns Foreign Alliance

In an effort to relieve the tense situation between France and Mexico, incidental to a demand which France has made upon Mexico for reparations in virtue of damages due French citizens resident in Mexico, and to prevent further military action by the French Navy and Army which is now occupying Vera Cruz, "a proposition has been made to President Van Buren to join in a coalition with England and France whereby a peaceful solution might be obtained." When the President submitted matter to his Cabinet the proposal was unanimously rejected on the grounds "that this government was reluctant to become implicated in the politics of European sovereigns."

Polish Exiles Take Advantage of Our Hospitality

In 1834 Congress extended to certain Polish exiles seeking refuge in this country the right "to select 36 sections from three contiguous townships in Illinois, upon the condition that they would go upon the land and occupy it for ten consecutive years, at the end of which time they were to receive deeds thereof upon the payment of $1.25 per acre."

Instead of complying with the letter and spirit of this law, it was charged by Senator Young, of Illinois, on the floor of the Senate that the agent of the exiles had selected 18 miles of the finest land in the State and that by so doing had impinged upon the rights of American pioneer settlers and certain Indian reservations set apart by the President. Senator Young demanded remedial legislation.

Domestic Affairs

Women in Politics—Horrible!!!

DOVER, DEL.—Some 300 women of Wilmington, Del., submitted a petition to the State Legislature urging the abolition of slavery in the State. The report of the legislative committee considering this petition was as follows:

"That the committee consider the petitions of women to our national and State legislatures (which the committee regret to see becoming so general a practice) as derogatory to that refinement and delicacy which should, under all circumstances, accompany the female character, and as unwarranted interference in subjects that should more properly belong to the fathers, husbands and brothers.

"Your committee is also decidedly of the opinion that the petitioners would confer more real benefit upon society if they would hereafter confine their attentions to matters of a domestic nature and would be more solicitous to mend the garments of their husbands and children than to patch the 'breeches' of the laws and the Constitution."

Need for Party Unity in Old Dominion

RICHMOND, VA.—Because of the deflection of such a large number of Democrats to the Whig Party and to the conservative wing of the Democratic Party, the old line Democrats in the Virginia Legislature now in session have sent out a call to all the counties of the State for the election of delegates to a great Democratic rally to be held in the Capitol at Richmond on the 3rd Monday in March. The prime reason given for this rally is that it constitutes "a determined effort to reunite the Democratic Party in Virginia."

New Plan to Conquer Seminoles

TALLAHASSEE TERRITORY OF FLORIDA—Although for the past three years the Florida militia, in collaboration with the United States Army, has endeavored to conquer the Seminole Indians, little progress has been made. In his message to the Legislature Gov. Call said that because of frequent Indian massacres so many settlers had left Florida that it was impossible to hold the land indefinitely without occupation by permanent settlers. The Governor urged immediate return of former settlers so that land once cleared of Indians could be taken up promptly by citizens of the Territory.

Foreign Affairs

Unification of Lower and Upper Canada

LONDON, ENGLAND—Upon his return to England, after having resigned his office as Governor-General of Upper Canada, Lord Durham presented to Parliament his "Report on Affairs of British North America."

His plan was as follows: First, union of both Canadas under the new name of "British North America;" secondly, establishment of a London office for the new colony; thirdly, the appointment of a viceroy to supplant the two former governers-general; fourthly, creation of a legislature of the union; and lastly, permission granted to each province to enjoy home rule in so far as their domestic matters are concerned. This report is now being considered by Parliament.

"Calling America"

Reluctantly, but nonetheless definitely, the American people are discovering that developments taking place overseas affect this country in both the material and the spiritual sense. The impact of totalitarianism is world-wide, constituting everywhere a serious threat to the democratic idea. But to no other country is this threat more fundamentally hostile than to the United States, founded on ideas and beliefs which Nazi-Fascism asserts to be false, decadent and ripe for elimination.

Recognizing the situation for what it is, the Survey Graphic has responded by devoting its February issue to the problem, under the general title of "Calling America." Edited by Raymond Gram Swing, the issue has contributions from many distinguished writers. A part of the magazine examines various aspects of totalitarianism in its home setting. But the majority of the articles have to do with domestic problems brought into sharp focus by the events in Germany and Italy. Among these are the racial issue, industrial relations, the refugees, religious liberty and so on.

The struggle between our way of life and the way of life imposed on an increasing number of Europeans is one of epochal proportions. What is at stake, as Mr. Swing points out, is nothing less than "the future of the free human mind and spirit." If democracy in the United States is to survive, the challenge of totalitarianism must be seen in its true proportions; the shortcomings of our own social order squarely faced. In helping to bring home this task the Survey Graphic is doing what one would expect from a magazine of its traditions.

Winant And The I. L. O.

Former Gov. John G. Winant, of New Hampshire, who has just been sworn in as director of the International Labor Organization, has a difficult task ahead.

The I. L. O., like other international organizations that came into being after the World War, is suffering increasingly from the collapse of the collective system. Virulent nationalism is on the rampage. There has been a steady disintegration of the spirit of co-operation in the world community. And in one country after another, the increasing preoccupation with extensive military preparations has steadily undermined labor standards that had been slowly and painfully built up over a period of many years.

Nonetheless, the I. L. O. continues to function. If anything, it has a more vital role to play at this time than ever before in its history. At no previous time has there been a greater need for co-operative action by government, capital and labor of the kind in evidence at I. L. O. meetings. At no previous time have the advanced industrial nations of the world, most notably the United States, felt so great a necessity for trying to elevate world standards of labor. Only in that way can our own standards be fully safeguarded.

It was this realization that impelled the United States to join the I. L. O. in August, 1934. Our participation in the activities of that body has proved valuable both to the I. L. O. and to us. As a great clearing house of economic information and as a mechanism for co-operation in the field of labor legislation and social improvement, the I. L. O. is a wholly constructive enterprise. Now, under its new director, it embarks on a new period of usefulness, even though it is beset by difficulties whose gravity and complexity none would deny.

Results Of Spending

On February 1 the Federal deficit passed $2,000,000,000 as compared with a deficit of $800,000,000 on the same date last year. Since the Administration "planned it that way" when it decided to embark upon a spending program to prime the business pump last spring, official congratulations, rather than apologies, would appear to be in order.

From the viewpoint of the pump-priming advocates, the deficit of the current year is not only a great deal larger than that of the preceding year, but it is a great deal more potent as an inflationary device. That is because the actual cash outgo of the Government is currently greatly in excess of cash income.

At the end of the first six months of the present fiscal year, the Treasury states that the actual excess of cash payments over cash receipts totaled $1,123,000,000, while the deficit for the same period was reported to have reached $1,577,000,000. The difference between these two totals is accounted for by the fact that certain expenditures listed, notably payments into the old-age reserve account, are mere bookkeeping items involving no cash outlays.

During the first six months of the previous fiscal year, the Government actually took in $150,000,000 more than it paid out in cash, although the deficit reported for the period amounted to $514,000,000. In short, collection of payroll taxes last year operated not only to offset the inflationary effect of Governemnt spending but exerted a deflationary effect insofar as it had any effect at all.

This year, therefore, the believers in pump priming have double cause for rejoicing: there is not only a large deficit on paper but a large deficit in the sense that cash outlays are much above cash intake. As the pump primers consider that the stimulus of deficit financing can only originate in an excess of cash payments over cash receipts, they should be happy in the outlook for bigger and better deficits.

Progress At Last

Washington has good reason to be delighted with the report which E. O. Griffenhagen and his associates have submitted to the Senate and House District committees. In one broad stroke of legislation these specialists in public administration propose to sweep away the cumbersome, inefficient and wasteful machinery by which the local community is now controlled and to set up in its place a modern municipal government.

The sweeping nature of the report may disturb some who are accustomed to thinking of the District as a static political entity. A few of the specific proposals will arouse controversy among groups specially interested in particular phases of municipal service. But those whose chief interest lies in more effective and efficient government for the District as a whole will probably give the report an enthusiastic indorsement. For Mr. Griffenhagen has brought forth the most constructive reorganization plan devised for the District since the obsolete organic act of 1878 was adopted.

Surveying the present setup, the experts found, like many others before them, a chaotic tangle of boards, commissions and other agencies, some responsible to local authorities, others to the Federal Government, and still others only to themselves. "Little of rime or reason, logic or consistency," the report points out, "is to be found in the whole conglomeration." No "unifying authority" is in evidence anywhere. Control of municipal functions here has been allowed to develop in such a haphazard manner that it is a misuse of the term to say that the District has a "system" of government.

Despite the best-intentioned efforts of officials and employes, the experts conclude that "waste, conflicts and friction" are inevitable under present conditions. Not a hint of corruption or mismanagement is conveyed by the report. But it constitutes a powerful indictment of the bewildering pattern presented by District agencies after 60 years of planless growth.

It is now widely realized that efficient and economical government can be obtained in Washington only by a thorough overhauling in line with the best modern practice. Fortunately, Mr. Griffenhagen was bold enough to prescribe the remedy which the situation demands and, at the same time, wise enough to avoid any proposal incompatible with Washington's function as the Nation's Capital. Thus his formula should make a strong appeal to members of Congress as well as to permanent residents.

The report clearly shows that a responsible local government can be established here without in any way sacrificing the national interest in the Capital City. Congress would maintain final control over the District, but municipal functions would be placed in the hands of local officials instead of awaiting action by the ponderous Federal machinery. All power essential to make Washington a "safe, comfortable, healthy and beautiful place of residence for the people of the District" would be lodged in the new local government through a well-defined charter or organic act.

Naturally the veto of the Federal Budget Bureau over local measures would be ended. Ordinances would be made by an enlarged city commission or council, instead of by Congress. Executive functions would be vested in a highly qualified official to be known as the District administrator, or other convenient title, instead of being divided as at present among three Commissioners. There would be complete separation of the legislative and executive powers in line with basic principles of American government.

Instead of being scattered in irresponsible fashion, administrative organizations would be grouped into 17 departments. Such departmentalization has come to be recognized as a standard pattern for administrative efficiency. There are strong hints in the report that it could be expected to produce substantial economies in the District. Of course, the groupings recommended by the experts must be carefully analyzed from the local viewpoint. But any shifts or exceptions that may be found desirable would not affect the soundness of the reorganization plan as a whole.

The report went outside its scope in recommending a lump-sum payment by the Federal Government to the District, with adjustments every five years. Its interest here, however, was simply in bringing about some fair settlement of the fiscal-relations issue to facilitate the division of Federal and local functions. Fortunately a way to solution of this fiscal problem has already been opened by the Overton formula.

On the whole, the report is excellent. It justifies an immediate start on the drafting of a District of Columbia charter. If local officials, civic groups and members of Congress approach this vital issue in the constructive spirit that characterizes the Griffenhagen report, a new and more efficient government will soon be operating at the District Building.

The Price Of Liberty

A new unit in the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice will be entrusted with the prosecution of infringements upon civil rights guaranteed under the Constitution. The timeliness of this development is emphasized by reports that "veterans" in Jersey City plan to give C. I. O. organizers there "a lesson," regardless of what the Federal courts decide in the issue.

The action taken by the Department of Justice follows the action of the American Bar Association in appointing a special committee to defend liberties guaranteed under the Bill of Rights. That committee has already performed a notable service by intervening in the Hague case with a view to upholding the right of peaceable assembly denied by the Jersey City officials.

The high-handed actions of the Hague machine, the organized lawlessness until recently prevailing in the coal mining districts of Harlan County, Ky., and the widespread disorders which have characterized efforts to organize the great mass-production industries, have all forcibly directed attention to the extent of wholly unjustifiable interference with the constitutional rights of individuals.

There is plenty of work for both the Department of Justice and for private organizations in safeguarding these rights against assaults that are not the less dangerous to democracy because well-intentioned. The Government, moreover, has certain special problems to face because many constitutional guarantees are, as Attorney General Murphy points out, guarantees against abuses by the Federal or State Governments. To make these guarantees effective by restrictions upon the Government itself is a task calling for most careful study and deliberation.

Attorney General Murphy has well said that "in a democracy, an important function of the law-enforcement branch of government is the aggressive protection of fundamental rights inherent in a free people." The mere knowledge that able lawyers in public and in private service are on the alert to discover and prosecute any infringement of such rights constitutes a large measure of protection against their violation. For one of the greatest dangers that confronts democracy is apathy or overconfidence in the automatic operation of the defenses set up by constitution and statute.

Strengthening of our agencies of law enforcement against impairment of fundamental liberties is evidence of awareness that the price of liberty is the exercise of constant vigilance.

Solid Ivory

Believe it or not, Charlie Peterson, of St. Louis, Mo., is able to balance three billiard balls one on top of the other on a billiard table. He says he is the only man in the world who can do the trick. This is not as it should be. As an indoor sport, billiard-ball balancing ought to be encouraged. With practice it may turn out to be no more difficult than budget balancing.

This suggests the really wonderful thought: Why balance budgets at all when you may balance billiard balls? Why not establish a WPA division of billard-ball balancers. Its slogan might be "A steady income for a steady hand."

Yea, verily. Billiard-ball balancing demonstrates that there is a center of gravity in a world of levity and solidity in a whirl of swing. It is what a jitter-bug-infested globe needs. It is something to induce calm and concentration.

Just think how peaceful this world might be if three energetic gentlemen in different parts of this suscitating sphere should become interested in the pleasing pastime! Just to make the game more entertaining the balls might be labeled "Germany," "Italy" and "Japan." To have them stand one upon the other would be symbolic of the alleged fact that they have one lofty ideal, one ennobling unity of purpose. And if the performers proved sufficiently lucky they might even equal Mr. Peterson's record and have them stand long enough to be photographed.

Reader, go thou and do likewise. It's your cue.

All an American has to do to be treated as if he were a king is to drive into a filling station and say, "Fill it up."

A seed-catalogue artist can give nature a head start and come in the home stretch three lengths ahead of her.

Rivers Of Water

NOTHING in the world is quite so continuously awe-inspiring to me as a river, nothing quite so potential. The sea itself depends on rivers. In many ways they have become symbolic. For the Ancients, a river—the Styx—was the figurative barrier between Earth and Hades; for Christians the River Jordan lies between Earth and Paradise. My friend Willis Jordan (who knows rivers) says there are to him two perfect words in the English language—"harmony" and "chocolate." I should like to give him at least one more—the word "river."

In the county where I was born we had plenty of rocks and rills and woods and templed hills, and many beautiful creeks, but no rivers. In those days we did not travel around much, and I must have been 12 years old before I ever saw a river. My first one was the Niagara, which is different from most rivers because its function is to connect two lakes rather than to drain the countryside. The Niagara is an ominous river, with a stupendous climax.

A few years later I went away to school only 50 miles east of the great Mississippi. En route, I remember, I crossed the Wabash River in Indiana. I had not then read Theodore Dreiser's "My Brother Paul," the story of the man who wrote Indiana's State song, "On the Banks of the Wabash," so there were no literary or musical associations hovering over as the train sped westward. I would not be satisfied until I had seen the Father of Waters—the Mee-zee-see-bee, as the Chippewas called it.

I saw it first at St. Louis. It was not so wide as I had imagined it, but it was the biggest river I had ever seen. I remember I went down to its edge, under the great Eads Bridge, and put my hand in its water. It was just wet, muddy water, but it was Mississippi.

The summer of 1924 I spent on the banks of the Iowa River, and for the first time witnessed the real strength and ruthlessness of a river. After continued heavy rains it went on a rampage. I had never seen nature so wild and intractable. I have seen worse floods since but none so impressive. I learned that a river is one of the most defiant things that man has ever tried to tame. It can be a riant demon crying "who is the boss around here?" And man is all too frequently reminded of the answer.

Two of America's most indigenous writers have written great books on rivers. Mark Twain commences his "Life on the Mississippi" with this modest statement: "The Mississippi is well worth reading about," and then he proceeds to render for us something about the river worth reading, something "seemingly as enduring as the river itself," as A. B. Paine said. It was natural that he should write of a thing he knew so well, and so it was also with Henry David Thoreau, who wrote "A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers." Mark Twain's and Thoreau's books are as little alike as the two men themselves were, yet it is significant that this great physical force, the river, in each case was the focus of their genius.

These thoughts were in my mind only last summer, when I saw more rivers than I had ever seen before—the Missouri, the Colorado, the Merced, the Yellowstone, the Shoshone—each so different, with a "mind" of its own. I thought of other American writers who have been inspired by the music and lore of our rivers (Lanier's "Song of the Chattahoochee," for example) and of some of our river songs: "Old Folks at Home," "On the Banks of the Wabash," "Old Man River," "Beautiful Ohio."

We are particularly river conscious today because of the urgent problems of flood control, soil erosion, and the conservation of waters. Thousands saw the Government's motion picture, "The River," with its gripping sound-track, which was followed by Pare Lorentz's book by the same name. In 1937 the publishers Farrar & Rhinehart, began a significant series of books called "The Rivers of America," in which four volumes have already appeared—"Kennebec: Cradle of Americans," by Robert P. Tristram Coffin; "Upper Mississippi: A Wilderness Saga," by Walter Havighurst; "Suwannee River: Strange Green Land," by Cecil Heulse Matschat; and "Powder River: Let 'er Buck," by Struthers Burt.

These books are literary productions rather than strictly historical works and are filled with folklore, poetry, and legend. "The significant thing," says Constance Lindsay Skinner, editor of the series, "is the beauty they have recorded and the inspiration of that beauty which flowed into the long river of human thought. It may be a new idea to many that geography itself determined that Americans should first live on and by rivers."

Never again do I want to live far from a river. There is too much to be learned from a river, so much of its music to hear, so many of its rhythms to absorb, that it becomes indispensable to one's happiness.

"It flows along forever
With trees on either hand"— a living and unpredictable source of power and beauty, abundantly characteristic of all Nature's gifts to mankind. PAUL H. OEHSER.

Dada In Exile

If Max Ernst had not decamped to Paris before the Nazi regime, he would have qualified for refugeeship under Hitler on the strength of his weird art and revolutionary notions. 'Ernst' means earnest or serious, but his work has been highly facetious. Now a revered old guard surrealist, he was a leading light of the riotous Dada movement just after the war. Dadaists aimed at smashing all accepted traditions by preaching that anything was art. They exulted in the ridiculous.

Cologne-born Ernst had his face smashed by a recoiling howitzer while serving with the German artillery at Soissons during the war. When he returned to his native city in the turbulent winter days of 1918, he met two kindred spirits in Artist Hans Arp and a communist leader named Baargeld. Between them they organized the all-time high in outrageous exhibitions—the Dada movement's Cologne exhibition of 1920.

The full and authentic account of what happened may be found in a recent surrealist publication. The two main exhibits were Baargeld's Fluidoskeptick and Ernst's Object in Wood. The Fluidoskeptick was a glass tank of water dyed a brilliant red, with an alarm clock at the bottom, a strand of hair floating on the surface, and a projecting model of a human arm.

Attached by a chain to Ernst's substantial Object in Wood was a hatchet, which guests were invited to use if they felt inclined. The visitors were delighted. They hacked the Object to pieces, smashed the tank and spilled its contents all over the floor.

Police broke up the show on the ground that it was obscene, and selected one picture to justify their action. It was a drawing by German old master Albrecht Durer.

Max Ernst and Arp went to help kindred spirits in Paris launch the surrealist movement. Ernst continued to be the wild man of the studios. At one party he turned up in paint-stained rags with his crisp graying hair dyed a brilliant blue. He played the part of a brigand in the surrealist film "L'Age d'Or" an anti-religious picture which was suppressed and put on the Catholic Index.

Visitors to the London Gallery last week saw specimens of Ernst's feckless imagination from his Dadaist down to his more restrained, surrealist days. A fair sample of his work is the Celibate Elephant, an early delicacy which reminded some of Field Marshal Hermann Goring. From News Review, London. Reprinted from Living Age.

Toleration, New Style

BECAUSE PARSON BOB had talked of attending on Sunday, February 5, an anniversary celebration of the arrival of Rober Williams in America the talk of the Old-Timers turned naturally to toleration in Rhode Island, Maryland and elsewhere.

"Few of us are tolerant enough to say a good word for the intolerant," said Casual Smith, "and yet there is a good word to be said, and it was said fairly well in the days of Roger Williams and the early Baltimores. It was said with heat and acrimony and therefore much more effectively than if said with reason and logic."

"There you go again," complained Demosthenes McGinnis. "Starting off with a lot of darned nonsense."

"Patience, man," said Casual Smith. "It's how you end that counts. What I was about to remark was that the zealots put up a pretty good case for themselves. Poly-piety (said one) is the greatest impiety of all. Toleration (said another) made the world anti-Christian. And they agreed that religious liberty was the negation of all religion. Which (if you are convinced that yours is the absolutely correct brand and that all others lead to perdition) is a perfectly logical conclusion.

"Toleration may be the brain child of a modest man (who concedes the possibility that the other fellow may have a little right on his side); of a kindly man (who sees no justice in punishing a man for his mental shortcomings); of a cautious man (who realizes that the underdog may some day be the upper dog); and of the careless man (who says, 'Why worry over trifles?'); but it is always the foster child of the oppressed.

"Continuing the figure (if you don't mind) Toleration was not one child but many children. In New England it was a seemly child, kindly, courteous, wise for its years. Of course, there were some of the neighbors' children with whom it was not allowed to play, but you know how it is with parents, just a little snobbish sometimes.

"In Maryland, toleration was in slightly better case; at least until the Toleration Act was written. The written document gave freedom metes and bounds; and to that extent Toleration was a prisoner.

"It was on this background of religious liberty that the Constitution of the United States was later penned, the past being ever a palimpsest on which history is rewritten.

"That Constitution is Toleration incarnate, a living thing of flesh and blood as well as spirit, and therefore subject to the ills of the flesh. To one of those diseases it may succumb unless vaccinated; the disease of intolerance; and the indicated cure is a hair of the dog that bit you."

"Surely you are not advocating intolerance, Casual," protested Parson Bob, shocked.

Casual Smith evaded a direct reply. "The Intolerants of today," he said, "are the Totalitarian States, children of the Devil, the Devil's Tots. The Tots refuse to stay in their own back yards, but insist on annoying their neighbors. So long as the Tots are tolerated the neighbors will continue to suffer."

"I can guess at the argument and continue it from that point on," said Captain Ebenezer Lonbow, in a dissenting tone. "To fight Fascism you have to become fascist; instead of government being the servant of man, man must become the slave of government. I concede that necessity in war time. A small army can beat a large mob. But we are not at war."

"You may be right," said Casual Smith, "but in this topsy turvy world a war may begin long before a blow is struck and very many blows may be struck before war is formally declared. The point to be considered is at just what point you cease to tolerate the enemy within the gates."

"My son fought in the World War," said Demosthenes McGinnis, "and he quite approves of the American Legion busting up Nazi meetings. He says when he takes a gander at these birds doing the goose step he knows they mean no good to American institutions."

"One of them," Parson Bob reminded him, "is the right of peaceful assembly."

"Quite so," said Casual Smith. "But suppose a foreign bunch assembled on your property and urged the members of your congregation to burn your church and erect a dance hall, what then?"

"I'd take steps," began Parson Bob, "and——"

"You'd take steps to restrict their liberty, and very properly; and when you succeeded you'd have to be watched to prevent you from becoming an old tyrant."

"Parson Bob bridled, and Capt. Longbow, grinning, said, "It's the dominie's followers that would need watching."

"Anybody's followers," said Casual Smith, "right, left or down the middle. In the preservation of our liberties the sheep present an even bigger problem than the goats."

Success At Lima

By Albert Grand

Some Positive Accomplishments

THE GREATEST SURPRISE awaiting more than one newspaperman on his return from the eighth Pan-American Conference at Lima was the question, "Was it really a success or a failure?"

All impartial observers came away from the Peruvian capital confident beyond doubt that the democratic principles inspiring President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull had been given official consecration by the 21 participating states, thereby marking a first "ideological" victory over international totalitarianism. Strange though it may seem, however, this evident fact has been largely ignored in the United States.

ANALYSIS of the multiple and vague objections against the results achieved at Lima will first be necessary to bring some semblance of order to the criticism directed not only against the intrinsic value of the results themselves, but against the very method by which they were realized. I intend, in answering this criticism, to pay particular attention to the latter form of censure, since it indicts the very principles on which the United States' system of Government is founded.

But, first of all, what were the actual problems facing the 21 American nations during their 20-day parley in the "City of Kings?" Generally, they fell into two brackets—purely American problems of the type which have faced every conference since 1826 and those stemming from the territorial expansionist policies practiced at Berlin, Tokyo and Rome, which affect this hemisphere as directly as any other country in the world.

It remained to be seen at Lima whether the 21 attending American nations were inspired by mutual determination to resist any extra-continental aggression, or if they would reveal a loophole—however small—permitting infiltration of "totalitarian" morals and policies. The conference also was regarded by a certain number of states more directly menaced by possible aggression as a foundation on which to build the first stones of a continental defense system impregnable to attack from any quarter.

THIS, as President Roosevelt has affirmed on many occasions since his famous speech at Kingston, Ontario, last August, can be regarded as one of the essential preoccupations of Washington's international policy.

Paradoxical though it seems, critics have charged the Lima Conference with "the application of democratic methods to international relations." In other words, they arraign Lima for not having proved "another Munich" and assert the 21 delegations should have followed the strategy adopted by the four-power Czecho-Slovak conference to secure "prompt and concrete results."

Such argument deliberately ignores both the spirit and historic conditions which alone enable the 21 American nations to work together. Disregard of those factors stalemated the 1928 Pan-American Conference at Havana. Secretary Hull, on the other hand, took them into deep consideration and, with the 1933 Montevideo and 1936 Buenos Aires conferences as a stepping stone, won approval at Lima of a declaration of solidarity which is due to mark a significant turning point and the start of an era of active co-operation in Inter-American relations.

SECRETARY HULL'S feat could not be realized, however, until all suspicions linking the United States with "dollar" and "big stick" policies were erased from South America. It was equally necessary to replace the brutal expression surrounding the original definition of the Monroe Doctrine—invoked to preclude possible aggression by imperial Russia and the Holy Alliance powers—with a more flexible formula which would recognize the progress and development realized by the "young" South American countries since 1823.

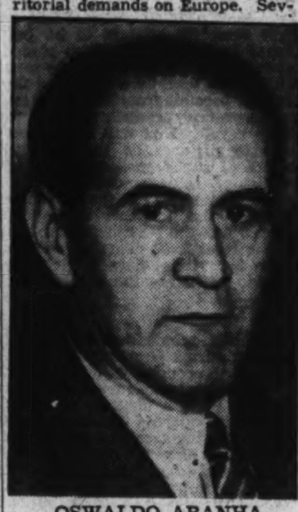
This double-barreled goal has been sought by Secretary Hull since he came to office in 1933 and was actually one of President Roosevelt's cardinal points of policy in the foreign affairs domain. It was President Roosevelt who launched the slogan, "good neighbor policy." Secretary Hull in turn succeeded at Lima in translating this into a new interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine, which no longer is an expression exclusively of Washington's policy, but rather the expression of Pan-American security, with the "declaration of solidarity" as its text.

No one had expected it would prove easy to draft such a declaration, roughly outlined at the 1936 conference convoked by President Roosevelt for the maintenance of Pan-American peace. Primarily, it was necessary to discover a middle ground which, although acceptable to each individual country, would answer the preoccupation of all 21 states. Only one path was possible—to apply "democratic" methods of discussion, to permit each delegate to have his voice freely heard without racial, religious or geographical prejudice. That was why Secretary Hull insisted upon the unanimous approval of all resolutions, regarded by him as the sine qua non of any Pan-American conference.

ONE NEED only to reread the speeches delivered before the Lima conference's opening session by Secretary Hull and Argentine Foreign Minister Jose-Maria Cantilo to be convinced that there were no essential differences between the views of Washington and Buenos Aires. Both insisted that they were attacking ideas, not nations; individuals, not peoples. In view of the interpretation placed on Argentine policy, it is particularly timely to recall Cantilo's declaration that "Each and every one of us is disposed to maintain and give proof of this solidarity in the face of whatever danger coming from any quarter which may menace the independence or sovereignty of any state in this part of the world." Pacts were not necessary, he said, but, "We would act with the same impulse, with our frontiers erased and a single flag for all—the flag of liberty and justice."

What was the "declaration of solidarity" eventually evolved to state the principles outlined by Hull and Cantilo? Briefly, in this instrument the 21 American republics reaffirm their continental solidarity and their determination to maintain the principles on which it is based—namely, desire for peace, respect for international law, equality of states and respect for individual liberty without racial or religious discrimination.

NOW LET US TURN to the individual problems raised for some American states by the threat of possible aggression from powers pursuing an expansionist program, namely, Germany, Italy and Japan. Immediately after Munich, Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler announced that the Sudetenland's annexation satisfied his last territorial demands on Europe. Several days later, however, Germany brought to the fore the question of regaining the colonies taken from the Reich after the World War. These demands are reinforced by an intensive naval rearmament program, only one phase of which was revealed by Berlin's recent demand for submarine parity with Great Britain. Spanish Insurgent Generalissimo Francisco Franco's expected victory further raises the almost certain prospect that the German and Italian fleets will be afforded well-sheltered bases along Spain's coast, at El Ferrol and Pasajes, and in the Rio de Oro, on Africa's western coast.



OSWALDO ARANHA
Brazilian Foreign Minister

It is not hard to imagine that a modern fleet and its air arm might strike toward the Caribbean, aiming for the Panama Canal or the poorly defended coasts of Brazil. One need only recall the World War exploits of the German submarine Deutschland, which succeeded in reaching the West Indies in 1917.

This naval problem played a minor, but important, role at Lima for the United States and the "Caribbean" countries, with Brazil undoubtedly included. Defense of the Caribbean is not a new problem for the United States. With Britain's example in mind, Washington has sought since the days of Theodore Roosevelt to make the Caribbean—gateway to Panama Canal—"another Mediterranean." The Lima Conference was put to good use on this score and the forthcoming visit to Washington of Brazilian Foreign Minister Oswaldo Aranha, together with President Roosevelt's defense messages to Congress and the theme of the current American fleet maneuvers, give strong proof of the directives behind Washington's efforts.

AN IMMEDIATE Japanese threat can be discounted, since Tokyo must first fight its way out of the current undeclared Sino-Japanese war and certainly would only act in agreement with the other two members of the anti-Comintern pact, Germany and Italy. This factor brings Germany and Italy into bold relief as the only two powers now able to threaten aggression against the Americas.

The question undoubtedly will be asked whether Pan-American solidarity, similar in many respects to the League of Nations system evolved at Geneva, is not left open to the mercy of one kind of "Anschluss" or another. Such a threat could materialize under one of two conditions—where a South American "Strong Man" himself adopted an expansionist program, or where existing governments were attacked from within by organizations receiving orders and funds from abroad.

The Lima Conference naturally could concern itself only with the second alternative. As for the first, one need recall only two facts:

(1) France and Spain, both more closely linked with South America by language and culture than any other country, have been unable to win the political sympathies of the Latin states.

(2) The United States will always rule against any European ambitions in Latin America as long as she remains the hemisphere's greatest creditor nation, and the Latin-American countries will not accept "Mein Kampf" as their bible until the United States becomes a totalitarian state.

The Reynolds Speech

Mr. Barefoot Thinks It Contains Many Fallacies

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On January 25 Senator Bob Reynolds, of North Carolina, occupied 22 pages of the Congressional Record in getting over fewer ideas than I would have believed possible, and with a greater percentage of factual errors. If it had been a filibuster he could scarcely have wasted more words on less matter, including praise of himself, digressions to apply soft soap to other Senators and to the press, and some score references to American mothers.

He spent much time exhorting us not to hate the Germans and much time inciting us to hate the British. The burden of his speech was that stale red herring—American interference with other people's affairs. He talked as if a lot of people were urging Uncle Sam to war because of sympathy with foreign minorities and desire to police the world, but he never got down to discussing the interest of the United States in a peaceful world.

He warned us against the Fascist powers, he claimed Germany, Italy and Japan would unite against us if we shipped any arms to Spanish loyalists; so he advocated that American policy should continue to strengthen these powers by shipping them arms, by buying their goods and by breaking up any proposed collective penalization of their aggressions.

Russia shipped arms to Spain without being attacked by Germany, Italy and Japan, but Senator Reynolds says that the United States would be attacked. American ships would be sunk and then we would go to war, he says. Why didn't he add, "just as we did when the Japs sank the Panay and the oil tankers?" Fifty-odd nations imposed economic sanctions on Italy without being attacked by Italy, but the sapient Senator says if we had joined in the sanctions we would have been attacked. Why does he think the Italians would pick on the world's greatest industrial power?

There was a time when American Senators advocated defense of American interests abroad and let the other country worry lest war should develop. Egged on by someone who cited a precedent established by President Andrew Jackson, Senator Reynolds was momentarily brave enough to suggest seizing British investments in the United States—Britain being a peaceful country. But how contemptuous Andrew Jackson would be of the Senator who cringes in terror at the mere thought that defense of American foreign interests might put us at odds with Japan and Italy!

The learned member of the Senate committee on Foreign Relations seemingly doesn't know that Nova Scotia is part of the Dominion of Canada and not controlled by London. He says that in 1931 the Japanese proceeded northward "through Korea and likewise through the port of Shanghai, via Peiping, for the purpose of making conquest of Manchuria;" that Manchuria has 120,000,000 inhabitants, that the government of China is two-thirds communistic. He implies that raw cotton and cotton textiles are the only items in Japanese-American trade, "For every $115 that she (Japan) gave us, the whole people of the United States returned to her only $15." He thinks that the Nine Power treaty guaranteed the integrity of China and that Secretary Stimson cabled the British government to join us in stopping Japan in 1931.

In a muddy way he seems to argue that we should abandon our interest in the Far East because British interests are greater. Apparently if the Senator had a house in a narrow valley and a prairie fire were approaching he would not put out the fire because that would save also a dozen houses behind his which he did not own.

He challenges us to show when England "ever ceded a square foot of land to anyone else." Since 1927 she has returned to China the port of Weihaiwei and "concessions" in three cities. Decades ago she gave the Ionian islands to Greece. By formal legal enactment she has bestowed independence on Ireland and other dominions. In 1925 she ceded Jubaland (34,000 square miles) to Italy. She has given up the protectorate proclaimed over Egypt in 1914 and recognized the independence of Irak. Excluding the Dominions, British concessions since the World War total only about 14 million million square feet.

For the dunce's cap I nominate Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina. J. A. BRUCE BAREFOOT.
Washington, Jan. 27.

[Ed. Note: It may be noted that in the speech to which our correspondent refers Senator Reynolds said: "I shall be perfectly frank and state that I like to have the newspapers write something about me . . . Whether it is good or bad, I want them to say something, because when they quit talking about you, you are a dead one."]

Excerpts From Our Letters

France

By all means, let us help France against the Central Powers of Europe in any way we can. Sell her military planes or, if necessary, give them to her. France defends the first line of western civilization. It is most important to that civilization that she be not defeated. She has more than once hurled herself between the hordes of the East and the civilization of the West and either turned them back or held them until the other powers of the West could come to her aid—C. M. Dodson, Falls Church, Va.

Insurance

I was particularly struck by the statement by a member of the American Medical Association suggesting that every individual or family, subsisting on the smallest of incomes, should contribute a certain percentage thereof toward health insurance. A rather dubious method of health protection for them, but an excellent one for the physicians—J. L. Sinclair, Washington.

Bites

I wonder who made the law allowing every dog "one bite." Occasionally we read of a human being taking a single bite at another human or a cop. I have never yet heard of one who was dismissed without punishment. I have always been a lover of dogs, as dogs, but when they seem to have privileges denied human beings, well, pardon me, but I simply don't get it.—"A Believer in Justice," Washington.

Ship

Where is President F. D. Roosevelt steering the "Ship of State?" To gain the upper hand over Congress and to get dictatorial powers he read his speech to a joint session of Congress in March, 1933, and this was acted upon. After getting unlimited "executive authority" he reversed what he said in that speech and squandered billions of dollars in a huge Democrat pork barrel, the worst in all the history of the United States. All Americans should read the Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt's speech to Congress in March, 1933, and compare facts!—Land Admiral, Washington.

Nurse

Instead of producing song and music in the home, we turn on the radio. Wouldn't it be better to think less of politics and of Mr. Roosevelt and express ourselves more in our own lives? We might even then be able to help our President and not require him to run for a third term. He should not have to be a dry nurse for the country—An American, Washington.

Quarantine

Had we rallied to a man behind the author of the Chicago quarantine speech there would have been no Munich. Instead of which, a thousand voices gave aid and comfort to a potential and watchful enemy. The result has been written in the blood and agony of tens of thousands of victims who are our brothers, if the scroll of holy writ carries any meaning. How far from hanging their heads in shame are those who accuse our President of being "jittery"—H. de Jersey, Washington.

Views

Since Roosevelt singled out Thomas R. Amlie in preference to anyone else, is it not proof conclusive that his views and those of the President coincide exactly?—Americus, Daytona Beach, Fla.

Liberties

The news that the new Attorney General will install a bureau in his department for the protection of civil liberties is an interesting item—and would have been much more so if he had given some hint as to whose liberties are to be protected. Many people who lived in Detroit when the present Attorney General was Mayor of that city still remember that during those two years a beautiful little park in the center of the shopping district was turned over completely to a motley group of people who, under police protection, openly displayed their banners and sold or distributed free their literature. Explanation was made from the City Hall that it was unwise to suppress agitation, which is no doubt true, but it didn't seem necessary to give them the choicest spot in town.—Wolverine, Washington.

Prayer

Is there any one thing upon which the peoples of this discordant world can unite in any great number? Can't all Christian nations unite in the Lord's Prayer. Does anyone doubt that the faithful application of this prayer would heal war, which is social disease. Does anyone believe that the teachings of Christ Jesus have ever been tried in time of war and rumors of war?—A. S. H., Chevy Chase, D. C.

Rest

In this jittery world stop now and then and take a rest. It is said that the average person spends six days a year sick. Why not take these six days, spend them one at a time in bed resting, instead of waiting until we are down, then call the doctor and take bad medicine. Of course doctors must make a living, too, so why not engage them to keep us well—Lela Hillers, Washington.

Glad

I am glad for having lived, for the joys and sorrows that may come, for having God with me always, for the love he sent to me long ago which will never fade from my heart, that I shall never be completely alone. In addition, I am glad for being an American and being able to be alive to speak of these things about which I am glad—A Woman, Washington.

Children

It has been said that, "the education of a child should begin at least 100 years before it is born." This, I am sure, applies to both body and mind. Breeders of stock have long known and acted upon this truth; why, then, should less wisdom, less care be exercised in relation to the human race which thinks of itself as the noblest work of God? Why should there be any, or at least so many, children who have known only the bad breaks" as Mr. Dare expresses it? Those who permit themselves to be looked upon as leaders among the people are taking upon themselves, also, the responsibility of answering the piteous, even though inarticulate question, in the faces of children who have never known anything but sickness and want, for often the parents themselves are not able to comprehend their responsibility. It seems to me, then, that a real charity would take upon herself to see that every precaution be taken that children may not come into life already crippled by disease or poverty of mind or body. The human race might then have a better right to call themselves the children of God—Lois Christensen, Washington.

Appeal To America

German Swiss Asks Us Not To Believe Nazi Propaganda

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In these times, when it becomes increasingly difficult to estimate how far the collapse of human values will progress in Germany, or in what manner a general opposition to that collapse will one day arise, Switzerland, the oldest democracy in the world, believes she should solemnly appeal to the greatest and most influential democracy of today—the United States of North America.

We are not concerned to urge on Americans any intervention in the name of liberty. Americans themselves will best know what they must do. We are, however, concerned to assure the Americans that our will for freedom and self-determination remains steadfast and unchanged. We are concerned to prevent the Swiss nation from being named in the same breath with the Germany of today, merely because the majority of our population speaks a German dialect and is proud of its connection with the former German culture.

The first appeal we wish to direct to the American people is this: Do not hold against us the fact that the majority of us belong to the Germanic language group. Always keep clearly in mind that in the Swiss state the non-German elements (the French and the Italian Swiss) form an important and today doubly valuable counterbalance.

If one considers how, for years after the World War, everything German was despised and fought, one cannot ignore the more acute and even tragic situation of German-Switzerland today. As Germany withdraws farther and farther from its own Christian-human civilization, we have become the only spot on earth where the language of Goethe is not the language of Hitler as well. We have nothing more to say to the rest of the German-speaking world.

In 1914 Germany became uncomfortable for the world. But today she has, through her inconceivable inhumanity, drawn such hate to herself that we can look to the coming war, which is drawing nearer year after year, only with the greatest apprehension. A victorious Germany will destroy us spiritually, while a beaten Germany will bring upon us the anger of the victors. Even were it again possible to preserve our neutrality, we could not escape this terrible dilemma.

We have no desire to make ourselves out better than we are. We have in our midst some enslaved souls, willing to sell their birthright. But although the representatives of certain professions are much sought after in Germany today, even across the borders (because it becomes clearer every day that even under the Nazi regime not everything can be done solely by able Nazi-partisanship)—it does not necessarily follow that the adage "I sing the song of the one whose bread I eat" is true for everyone of us. Such an assumption would be an insult to the many Swiss, who, though they have lived the greater part of their lives abroad, have always remembered their native land. Similarly, we do not lack those who would go barefoot rather than goose-step in high boots and spurs in Adolf Hitler's march of triumph. The overwhelming majority of the Swiss people answers with an emphatic and unalterable "Never" the thought of entering the Hitler-paradise.

Our weakness lies in a certain sleepy trustfulness, under which the old warlike spark is by no means dead, but which has but little insight into the "deceitfulness of the times," of which even our old letters of incorporation speak. Military expansion is now the center of interest and relatively few people are conscious of the highly organized and scientific propaganda machine on the other side of our border. The aim of this machine is to make us ripe for assimiliation by the method which has proven so successful in Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, that is to say, by undermining us in our own country while we are lowered in the estimation of the world. We can defend ourselves against the former method but what can we do against the second attack?

Americans, you may believe me: It is completely impossible that any Swiss government will ever accept a sort of Munich agreement. It is also very obvious that, when the Swiss army has once mobilized and is in position, all the guns would go off on their accord. Do not suppose we may hesitate for one second to spill "German blood," or that we shall make a retreat such as the Czech army made. The command for such a retreat could not be given. We are not Austrians; and we are more united than was the Czecho-Slovak union. We know for what we would fight to be as we are—or not to be at all.

Our Foreign Policy

By Ernest Lindley

Precisely What Is The Policy?

THE PRESIDENT did not tell the Senate Military Affairs Committee that France is the American frontier, but he is acting as if it were.

Over the objection of the War Department, he granted a special favor to France. He authorized a French air ministry mission to inspect, with a view to buying immediately, at least one American military plane of such new design that it had not even been passed upon finally by our War Department. Without this special authorization the French would have had to wait until this plane had been rejected by the War Department or had been in service in this country for a year.

This was not, therefore, an ordinary commercial arrangement, such as has been made by the British, the Dutch and many other nations which have been buying American military planes.

The President apparently did not quibble over this point but, in his talk with the Senate Military Affairs Committee, defended the giving of all possible assistance to the re-arming of the democracies in Europe.

AS SO FREQUENTLY HAPPENS when a foreign policy is under debate, White House lieutenants have tried to overawe critics by asserting that the President has access to information which is not available to the public, or even to Congress, except as he transmits it in confidential conversations. Through all the channels which are at his disposal, the President should have a great deal of information which is not available to the general public. I think the amount of such information can be exaggerated easily. The reports which flow in from our missions abroad usually are contradictory. Often they are slower and less illuminating than the published accounts of American newspaper correspondents abroad. Even when the facts, as reported, are undisputed, there are often the greatest differences of opinion as to their significance, among experts in the State Department.

KEY PITTMAN
Chairman Senate Foreign Relations Committee

The main lines of American foreign policy are not, and cannot be, determined by day-to-day information, whether confidential or not. They should be based on a concept of the proper role of the United States in the world. If you believe that the role of the United States is to defend "right" against "wrong" everywhere in the world, to oppose "aggressors" everywhere, to defend international "morality," you favor one kind of foreign policy. If you believe that the proper role of the United States is to defend itself and its neighbors to the north and south, you believe in another kind of foreign policy.

THE PRESIDENT has never clearly stated in which of these two policies, or in which variants of them he believes. Or, rather, he has talked at times as if he favored one, and at times as if he favored the other. The pronouncements issuing from the State Department seem to me to have been fully as confused and contradictory.

In part this confusion of utterance has been due to the understandable desire to win the widest possible support for the Administration's foreign policy. Like the politicians who say a kind word for the Townsend Plan in one breath and demand a balanced budget in the next, the Administration spokesmen have mixed their slogans and actions with a view to pleasing both the isolationists and the internationalists.

Recently, however, the President has moved farther toward the ideas of the internationalists, the interventionists, the advocates of a holy war by the democracies against the Nazi-Fascist states.

If anything in the realm of political affairs has been proved during the last quarter of a century, it is that the United States cannot promote, or save democracy by fighting a war on the continent of Europe. Out of the great war for democracy came communism, fascism and nazi-ism, and, in our own country, a period of political and social stagnation which brought us to the verge of economic ruin.

I DO NOT BELIEVE that the form of government adopted by any other country is of any great concern to ours. In our relations with Latin America we have taken the position that any nation's form of government is its own business. We are on friendly terms with Latin-American nations which are democratic only by a very great stretch of the imagination. The notion that the United States cannot exist as a democracy even if democracy disappears altogether in Europe, seems to me to be weak and defeatist.

The British Empire has grown under several forms of government. It has been allied with various forms of governments, and it has won military victories over more than one form of government. The interest of the British in the assistance of the United States is not based in the slightest on our form of government, but on the fact that we are the most powerful nation in the world—plus the fact that we harbor no ambitions inimical to the British Empire.

Our interest in the British Empire is not based on the form of Government in Great Britain, but on two considerations: That Great Britain harbors no ambitions inimical to our national safety, and that if the British Empire should collapse we would have to deal with a host of serious problems.

IF BRITISH NAVAL POWER, the backbone of the British Empire, should be destroyed, we would be faced with the possibility of a naval threat to the Western Hemisphere simultaneously in both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. We might have to build our Navy far above any size we now contemplate. Meanwhile, we would have to decide, probably, whether to defend Australia and New Zealand and, possibly, South Africa.

There is another possibility, short of the destruction of British naval power, that would be disturbing to us. That is a filtering through of an aggressive, expanding power, such as Germany is today. We have a serious interest in German demands for colonies. A German naval base on the West Coast of Africa or in the Cape Verde Islands would add to the expense and difficulty of defending South America. German naval or air bases in the Azores, Greenland, or Iceland, would give us grave concern. Under existing conditions, we would be justified in regarding the establishment of bases by an aggressive, expanding power at any of these points as a hostile act.

As long as Germany is pushing eastward in Europe—as long as Germany remains a continental military power and does not become a naval power—we have no cause for anxiety. As long as Japan is occupied on the continent of Asia, and is not expanding by sea southward and westward in the Pacific area, we have no great cause for anxiety.

France is the American frontier only in the sense that France is the ally of Great Britain. If France were to fall under German domination, the position of Great Britain, already weakened to some extent by German air power, would become almost untenable.

THE PRESIDENT would clear the air immeasurably if he would drop all the shopworn talk about saving democracy and all of his furtiveness in steeering our foreign policy, and speak realistically of the value of British sea power to the United States. How much is the British navy worth to us? How much is it worth to us to have the Nazis kept bottled up on the continent of Europe? It is worth something, in my opinion. It is not worth another great expeditionary force abroad. It would be far less costly, if worse came to worst in a general European war, to seize the Azores and other outlying points and establish our own advanced naval bases for the defense of the Western Hemisphere. But British naval power, backed by a firm British foreign policy, is probably worth enough to us to justify preferential treatment for Great Britain and her ally, France.

The difficulty is in drawing a line. Once we are committed to a cause or one side, it becomes almost impossible to stop. In 1917, even after we had declared war on Germany, it was generally assumed in this country that we would limit ourselves to financial and naval aid to the allies. Then it was thought that we would send just a few troops as a symbol to bolster the morale of the British and French. We ended by training and transporting the greatest expeditionary force ever sent across an ocean.

The line can never be drawn so long as our European policy is based on slogans concerning the defense of democracy. The only chance of stopping where we ought to stop—perhaps only a slim chance at best—lies in cold appraisal of the extent of our national interest in the preservation of British sea power.

TRIBUTE

By Inez Barclay Kirby.

O, Lincoln, have all golden words been said
And every honor heaped upon your name?
Have laurels on an unaccustomed head
Befitted ill a brow unused to fame?
The ages hail you and the years exalt;
How strange and alien must this glory be—
Column and statue, shining marble vault—
To one who lived in such simplicity.

I think, if ever you should come again
And shouting myriads herald your return,
That you would vanish from that throng of men,
But some few humble strangers' hearts would burn
Because you joined them at the close of day
And talked and jested with them on their way.

Manpower Monopoly

By Evelyn Page

JOHN MARTIN, national affairs editor of Time, has combined the functions of satirist and prophet in his novel, "General Manpower." As the story starts off, it is pure satire, centered about an amusing and not too fantastic idea. Its hero, J. Orestes Jones, has had a varied career as an usher at Roxy's, as a vaudeville strong man, and finally as organizer and head of General Manpower, Inc.

"General Manpower" is the result of Jones' personal experience and of his observation of the needs of the world. Jones was a puny, physically underdeveloped youth who trained himself into strength and dominance. If he could do it, he believed that others under his supervision could do it also. Thousands subscribed to his correspondence course, launched under the sales phrase, "Man or Mouse?" From this mass of raw material Jones selected the best elements for a demonstration.

In 1945 Finland, under the auspices of General Manpower, won the Davis Cup. The world took little notice, however, until "three years later when Manchukuo won the Olympic games hands down at Wembley and it was disclosed that, like the Finnish tennis players, the 12-man team of husky slant-eyes—one of them a girl—with their Emperor Kang-teh's vacant face tattooed on their bodies, had also been turned out by a big 'human products' plant and testing ground that Orestes Jones had erected with a grandiose corporate title at Ventura, Calif. Public interest was further piqued by the reports that the Manchukuan material had been methodically selected, its performance specified in detail, its training handsomely paid for, all by Japan to advertise Manchukuo's complete national autonomy."

After these exploits, Jones feels that the world is ready for his completed plan. He proceeds to send out a sales catalogue advising industry everywhere that General Manpower is now prepared to supply its human needs. "G. M. workers would dig subways, scrub floors, build roads, hew forests, drain marshes, mine ores. For any task requiring some skill as well as brawn, the company guaranteed to train its exceptionally powerful brawn so that 'one General Manpower unit easily yields the work of three ordinary laborers—at half the total wage.'"

G. M. DOES NOT only satisfy the demands of its clients. Its workers are its most devout adherents. Each man or woman who joins the legion—no one is admitted who does not pass the strictest tests—becomes a shareholder in the company, is assured an annual wage in cash, and living condition unparalleled for comfort and pleasure. Aspirants flock to Ventura, a paradise in a world still racked by insecurity and misery.

C. S. FORESTER

Orestes, after making a deal with Mexico, moves his cohorts to a country of their own in Lower California. There he is able to carry out his project without interference. He knows as well as anyone the logical conclusion of his idea. By 1954 he is able to supply embattled nations with soldiers who are invincible. Their physique is magnificent, their training thorough, their equipment complete, their discipline flawless. They are the skilled workers of war, at the service of any country that wishes to employ them. General Manpower, Inc., has become a force in international politics.

Its troops are not long idle. At th behest of Great Britain and Holland they are employed in the East Indies against the Asian Soviet Union. This is in 1958. Their campaign there, and their disastrous homecoming make up the last half of "General Manpower."

The story is at its best when it is pure satire. Mr. Martin handles his opening . . . a first-class take-off on big business and its implications with great skill . . . But his idea runs away with him, and as a prophet he is much less successful. He has forgotten that all the best prophets have done their work after the event. Time (not Time, Inc.) has already caught up with him. He has permitted Mustapha Kemal Aataurk, for instance, to remain alive until 1954, but according to all the best newspapers Ataturk has been hors de combat since November, last. So it is likely to go with other parts of his forest. I wish he had stuck to his original mutton. The twentieth century could do with a Dean Swift.

"FLYING COLOURS," by C. S. Forester is such a romance of adventure, as Marryat or even G. A. Henty might have written. I do not say this in dispargement, by any means, for if Mr. Forester shares their limitations he partakes also of the qualities that have made their fame. He is a writer who keeps to his course. His hero, Capt. Hornblower—chief character also of "Beat to Quarters" and "Ship of the Line"—is in the honest tradition of British naval commanders who fight a ship against tremendous odds until it sinks, and to whom the French are, inevitably, Frogs.

Thanks to his courage and tenacity, Capt. Hornblower is now a prisoner of Bonaparte's, held in the fortress of Rosas, from whose ramparts he can see his own Sutherland, a beached wreck after a fight against four French vessels. Half his crew is dead, others are dying of their festering, untended wounds. When an emissary of the Emperor arrives to escort Hornblower to Paris, only Lieut. Rush, whose foot has just been amputated and his servant, Brown, are permitted to accompany him. It is just as well, Hornblower thinks, for he knows that at the end of a mock court martial he and his companions will be shot. But there is nothing to be done. They start out on the long journey, heavily guarded. Even if he and Brown had a chance to escape, Hornblower realizes, they would have to leave Bush behind—and that is out of the question.

To distract himself, Hornblower thinks of his wife, Maria, who is in England expecting the birth of a child, and of Lady Barbara, with whom he is passionately in love. They are in his mind when the lumbering coach in which the prisoners are transported gets stuck by a river bank and can't be cleared. There is a boat tied up to the bank. The escort has gone for help. Brown overpowers the one remaining guard, and he and Hornblower manage to get Bush into the rowboat and cast off.

After a wild ride over rocks and rapids, they are finally capsized, but they have come a long distance in the swift current and near them they see the lights of a house. Whatever the danger, they must take refuge there. Luck is with them. It belongs to the Comte de Gracay, royalist, and no friend to the usurper. He gives them shelter and help, but it is their own daring that brings them in triumph back to England.

Readers of "Midshipmen Easy" may, even in this brief outline, have spotted one great difference between the Victorian and the modern novel of adventure. The love life of a sailor ante 1900 was a pretty vague affair, but Capt. Hornblower is a virile fellow, not without charm for wife or mistress. However, I don't think his amatory escapades take up enough space to spoil his career for those who like their warriors straight.

JILL HAMILTON—of "Jill Fell Down," by Jerrard Tickell—asks the loan of a match of a couple of gentlemen in Picadilly and finds herself arrested for soliciting. P. C. Evans, who takes her in, does not mince his words, and Jill clips him on the jaw. The magistrate lets her go with a lecture, but the tabloids get the story and serve it up rare. Her father, a prosperous stockbroker, and her brother, at Oxford, spring to her defense, but cannot stop the racket. Noel Graham, in love with her, assaults the policeman who arrested her. That puts the lid on it. He goes to jail for eight months, his career as a doctor ruined, and Jill once more in the headlines. If chance and their foolishness plunge them into misfortune, chance steps in again to get them out of it.

"Jill Fell Down" is a prime example of what happens to a book whose author puts lightweight characters for a trivial reason into a really dreadful situation. The situation is cheapened by its victims, and the victims are not in the least ennobled by their dilemma. The whole thing seems unncessary.

Besides, the publicity department of the British Empire ought to get to work on this story. Has the London Bobby fallen from his high place? And what has happened to the libel laws? I'll bet the author sixpence—to the honor of New York's finest—that I can acquire a dozen matches on Broadway and not get arrested once.

"NOTHING TO CHANCE," by Charles Pitsnier, Trans. by Pamela Morris. (Reynal & Hitchcock, $2.50.)

THIS IS THE STORY of two girls, of very different temperaments, who marry without love. They pay heavily for their recklessness and make a good many other people pay, too. The book is conscientiously and solidly, even intelligently, written and it has been distinguished by the Goncourt prize. But in a 388 page search for love on the part of two beautiful young women, if the reader is to feel the chase of any importance at all, he should be able to feel the heroines lovable, at least In the case of Fabienne and Marcelle, one has considerable more sympathy for and interest in the people who surround them, even those who wrong them. Wasteful though it is of the reader's interest, one might take this to be the author's intention did he not apostrophize his heroines every now and then in such a manner as to leave little doubt that he considers them and their struggles of prime importance and of very like tragic stature.

However, if one likes full page descriptions of amorous events and the effects of family tradition, there is plenty of both here.

Baker Biography Reaches Seventh Volume

President Wilson and Col. House in 1917

THE SEVENTH VOLUME of Ray Stannard Baker's authorized life of Woodrow Wilson covers a period of less than 11 months—from April 6, 1917, to February 28, 1918. But these were months of epochal importance, both in the life of the war President and in the history of the United States and the world.

With the United States engulfed in war, Wilson's already vast responsibilities as Chief Executive grew to mountainous proportions. His was the necessity of making all final decisions regarding the nature and the extent of our participation in the European conflict. And since, with each passing month, the scope of American war activity grew, so, too, did the burdens which rested on Wilson's shoulders.

In dealing with this momentous period Mr. Baker suffered from an embarrassment of riches. With a wealth of material at his disposal he could have done as he did in the earlier volumes, namely, traced the main lines of Wilson's policies according to subject matter dealing now, say, with the organization of American industry to meet the needs of the Nation at war, now with the Russian problem, which provided a gloomy obligato to the American war effort, now with the various peace feelers that were issued, and so on. To deal exhaustively with any of these subjects and the multitude of others that came to the attention of Woodrow Wilson during these 11 months would require not a volume but a whole shelf.

Mr. Baker has therefore chosen, and in this reviewer's opinion chosen wisely, to cover the ground in a strictly chronological manner, summarizing the events of each day, the actions taken by the President, the people seen, the letters written, the decisions reached, etc. The book, therefore, is more in the nature of a quarry than a rounded biography in the conventional sense. The method employed by Mr. Baker obviously has its limitations. It tends, at times, to emphasize purely ephemeral developments out of all proportion to their historical merit. But by including trivial as well as important occurrences, personal problems of the President as well as those arising out of his position, a very vivid picture results of Woodrow Wilson's life in wartime.

During the 21 years that have elapsed since 1917 a good deal of material has been published concerning our participation in the war. Many of the principal figures both here and abroad have published their memoirs and diaries or have been made the subject of more or less exhaustive biographies. A large quantity of documents from our own archives have been published. Under the circumstances, therefore, Mr. Baker could not help but cover in this book much ground previously covered by other works. Yet his access to the Wilson papers has made it possible for light on old questions.

THERE IS, for instance, the much debated question of how much Wilson actually knew regarding the secret treaties negotiated by the Allies before we entered the war. At his famous appearance before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Wilson declared that he had known nothing of them. This volume proves that was hardly the truth. The first reports regarding these secret treaties came from Ambassador Francis in Petrograd in about a fortngiht after we entered the war. He was informed in detail about them when Balfour called at the White House. Baker points out, however, that the Grey-Cambon letters on the division of the Togoland and the Cameroons and the two agreements with Japan regarding the German Pacific islands and Shantung were not mentioned. It is possible that when Wilson made the statement he did, he was thinking particularly of the Shantung Treaty since the cession of Shantung to Japan probably aroused greater opposition in the Senate to the Versailles Treaty than any other provision.

The current Baker volume also makes it clear that Wilson knew enough concerning British and French war aims to be decidedly suspicious of them. The bitter struggle that was to break out at Versailles early in 1919 was foreshadowed almost from the outset of our participation in the war. Indeed, the differences between Wilson and the Allies were so far-reaching and appeared so irreconcilable that he hesitated for a long time to speak publicly of war aims except in the broadest generalizations.

Thus, on July 21, he wrote House that "England and France have not the same views with regard to peace that we have by any means." But he was optimistic. When the war is over we can force them to our own way of thinking, because by that time they will, among other things, be financially in our hands; but we cannot force them now, and any attempt to speak for them or to speak our common mind would bring on disagreements which would inevitably come to the surface . . . I saw all this too plainly in a conversation with Viviani . . ."

By the end of the year the pressure for a statement of Allied war aims had become so great that Wilson changed his mind. Hearing from House of the latter's failure to persuade the Allies "to join in formulating a broad declaration of war aims that would unite the world against Germany," the President decided to make such a declaration himself. Nor did the potential historic significance of such action escape him. He told House, Baker and Gen. Bliss to whom he mentioned the matter that, quoting Baker, "an address by himself might prove to be the moral turning point of the war." This was on December 18. The Fourteen Points address was delivered to Congress on January 8.

Questions of foreign policy, even of the most momentous, did not, however, occupy all or most of Wilson's time. The biggest task before him was to transform the United States into a Nation wholly at war. Thus, day after day, in this chronicle there recurs references to the shipping board, the war industries board, the food administration, the organization of the American Army and conscription and all the other agencies through which America's energies were canalized in the effort to defeat the central powers. And there recur, too, repeated references to the problem of civil liberties in wartime, with Wilson, whose sympathies were wholly on the side of freedom, step by step being led in the direction of increased regimentation of opinion and increased suppression of pacifist opposition.

Opposition of another sort did not, however, disappear. The virulent attacks on Newton Baker and his administration of the War Department began early in 1918 and grew rather than diminished in vehemence. In a sense, that was the opening gun fired by the Republicans in the campaign of 1918 which was to have such momentous consequences.

Mr. Barker's seventh volume makes fascinating reading. It deserves a place on the shelf of every student of American history.

"WOODROW WILSON: Life and Letters, Vol. 7," by Ray Stannard Baker. (Doubleday Doran.)

The Anatomy Of Labor

By John M. Blair

Within the past two years a revolution has taken place in one of the most important domains of economic thought, the study of labor problems. From time immemorial labor, as a literary topic, has been thought of as almost the exclusive property of highly respectable professors. Many able textbooks have been written by these professors of labor problems, but a text, by its very nature, is seldom considered a necessity by the general book-buying public. Thus, for all practical purposes, the prbolems which labor has had to face have remained unknown to the general public, except insofar as they have been "interpreted" by the gratuitous services of such organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers, et al.

This situation has, however, been completely changed during the past two years. The C. I. O. not only awakened labor; it also awakened publishers to the inviting possibility of selling books about labor. As a result there has been a veritable deluge of works describing labor "organizing," labor "marching," labor "splitting," and so on almost endlessly. But some of these books have been hastily thrown together, and consequently many critical readers have been soured on this "new labor literature."

Some synthesis was obviously demanded between these popularized, journalistic treatments and the learned professorial texts. Such an integration has been very successfully achieved by Herbert Harris in his "American Labor." The drama, the vitality, the pulsating intensity of the skilled journalist are here combined with the care, the research and the clarity of the scholar. (The book possesses one of the best bibliographies on labor yet published.)

The technique utilized by Mr. Harris consists in describing the evolution of particular unions. The United Mine Workers, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, the American Newspaper Guild, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the railroad unions and the United Automobile Workers are considered as case histories of the way in which various phases of the labor movement have developed. Little of the factual data pertaining to the growth of these organizations constitutes new material to the student of labor problems, but the skill with which this growth is described, together with the penetrating anlysis Mr. Harris makes of the industrial conditions which provoked organization, gives to this book a power and vitality not to be found in any similar work. Thus, in describing the United Automobile Workers, Mr. Harris writes:

"In the interior of a 'body' plant, for example, at the far end of the belt, a new frame, a metal skeleton, bolt-sinewed, begins its journey. It reaches the first man who puts on a rim, goes to another who sets a fender, while underneath, men on their backs on litte roller cars tighten axle bolts, each man doing the same thing, eyes fixed on the chasis, sweat rolling from his face, jaws clamped, lift, turn, screw, liftturn-screw, with the tempo often imperceptibly quickened, unable to leave the line to go to the toilet, to get a drink of water, hour and hour, with the straw boss warning step lively, you're slipping fella, with the fear of losing the job if you don't keep up, making you strain tired muscles till your own body is a single throbbing ache while the belt, detached as a river coursing between its banks, flows smoothly on."

"American Labor" does not pretend to be a complete treatment of the labor problem. Mr. Harris does not, for example, present any extensive description of the evolution and activities of employers' associations; neither does he discuss the current disastrous factionalism within labor's ranks. But as a portrayal of the forces which underlie the development of the Nation's greatest unions, this book has no equal.

The Ten Best

"THE BEST PLAYS OF 1937-1938," by Burns Mantle. (Dodd, Mead, $3.)

NOT ONLY does Mr. Mantle's volume contain excerpts and summaries of his choices for the ten best plays of the year, but it also is a complete record of the professional theater's season—its plays, casts and statistics.

This year the Drama Critics' Circle award play, "Of Mice and Men," by John Steinbeck, heads the list and is followed by the Pulitzer prize play seen here in December at the National Theater, Thornton Wilder's "Our Town."

Of particular interest to Washingtonians are some of the other choices. "Shadow and Substance," by the Irishman, Paul Vincent Carroll, played here in front of wise audiences which recognized its superior qualities before its ultimate triumph in New York, where it achieved citation from the Critics' Circle as the most distinguished importation of the year. Gertrude Lawrence's popular success by Rachel Crothers, "Susan and God," and the witty Alfred Lunt-Lynn Fontanne production of the Giraudoux-Behrman "Amphitryon 38," also were enthusiastically received in our E street playhouse before going to New York.

Another recently at the National, Clifford Odets' "Golden Boy," and the prolific Maxwell Anderson's "The Star Wagon" are also included among those already seen in the Capital. One, however, is there which Washington will not see, at least not until the child labor law of the District is so amended as to permit the gifted younger generation to appear in the flesh as well as on the screen. That one is "On Borrowed Time," the Paul Osborn comedy in which one of the pivotal characters is a child of 6. The WPA Theater's successful play on the Abraham Lincoln-Ann Rutledge romance, "Prologue to Glory," by E. P. Conkle, and Clifford Goldsmith's high school comedy, "What a Life," complete the list.

Of all the many books on the theater which have appeared this season, this is one of the most valuable. It is a record of an exciting season in the theater, a worthy successor to Mr. Mantle's earlier volumes.

Policing The Jungle

"JUNGLE PATROL," by Vic Hurley. (Dutton, $3.50.)

IF PRESENT plans for Philippine independence are carried out, our Far-Eastern empire will have been forgotten without ever having been remembered. The American people have never become empire-minded, and to another generation the Philippines will probably be only a vague memory of an abortive adventure in imperialism. But to a few thousand old-timers in the American Army "the islands" are still a flaming memory. Whenever two of them meet, or whenever several assemble at the annual dinner of the Carabao Society, they swap tales of some of the most hair-raising adventures in the history of American arms.

Like all tropical warfare, the fighting in the Philippines was a business for professional soldiers. It lacked all the modern paraphernalia that clutter up killing on the big scale these days. It was war stripped to its primitive elements, with an Homeric quality about it, as it had in the Spanish conquest of the Americas. The individual soldier had to depend on his own courage and resourcefulness to a degree unknown in the factory-made slaughter of today.

In the Philippine campaigns the American soldier had a worthy foeman. For the Filipino, whether Tagel or Ilocano of Luzon, or the fanatical pulajan of Samar, or the Moro of the southern islands, was "a first-class fighting man." Usually armed only with the razor-edged bolo or kriss, hand-to-hand combat was their favorite brand of war. Of the Moros Mr. Hurley writes: "They offered the most stern quality of resistance that America has encountered in our military history." He excepts neither British, Mexicans, Spaniards, Germans, nor Indians, and one feels he is justified in his all-inclusive statement.

This book is the story of the Philippine constabulary, which early took over from the regular army the patrolling of the vast island reaches of jungle and mountain that extend from Cape Engano down beyond Zamboanga and Sulu to the edges of the Celebes Sea. In some of the islands insurrection was chronic for many years and eternal vigilance was literally the price of one's neck. The privates of this remarkable body were Filipinos; their officers were Americans, though natives gradually supplanted the American officers who led the corps in the early years of the century. The constabulary operated in small detachments, without a mobile commissariat or other supply service.

At first it was armed only with old Spanish single-fire shotguns and then with discarded black-powder rifles. It was only long afterward that a suspicious and niggardly government agreed to arm the force with smokeless repeating rifles. The constabulary took no account of odds. Rushed by overwhelming numbers of pulajanes or Moros, they depended on the effects of their first volley. If the enemy still came on, they fought with the cold steel, whose use they knew so well. They stormed Moro strongholds on Mindanao with a dash and abandon and cold finality rare in the annals of war.

The Americans who officered these redoubtable little brown fighters—Allen, Crockett, Grove, Knauber, Bandholtz, Taylor, Garwood, Tiffany, and the rest—were a veritable breed of paladins. The story of Leonard Furlong, who always sailed his campaign hat over the walls of a Moro fort before he led his men to the assault, is typical of their flair for battle.

Vic Hurley has performed a great service in saving from oblivion this saga of American valor. It is packed so full of adventure that our Hollywood historians may well leave the Indian northwest frontier and the Sahara Desert for a locale, which, thanks to these men, is still our own. The book should be required reading for every man in the armed forces of the United States. For sedentary civilians it is a capital tonic.

W. L. SCHURZ.

Of Voltaire

"THE SPIRIT OF VOLTAIRE," by Norman L. Torrey. (Columbia University Press, $3.)

Alfred Noyes' biography of Voltaire from the catholic point of view showed us last year how solid a crust of banal opinion must be chipped away before the many-sided spirit of Voltaire emerges. Prof. Torrey's thoroughly excellent little work is a further labor of correction, and one that should be consulted and pondered by all who dislike the easy generalizations that becloud a reputation and often tarnish the creative vigor behind it.

Here is a Voltaire who by his sensibility and even profound passion destroys the thin-lipped Satan of immemorial reputation. When the news of the terrible Lisbon earthquake of 1755 reached him, he wrote to Tronchin:

> There, sir, is some cruel physics for you. It will cause people no little embarrassment to divine how the laws of nature bring about such frightful disasters in the best of all possible worlds; a hundred thousand ants, our neighbors, crushed at one blow in our antheap, and half of them perishing in midst of debris from which they could not be rescued; families ruined to the ends of Europe, the wealth of a hundred merchants from your country swallowed up in Lisbon's ruins. What a sad game of chance it is, the game of human life!"

Voltaire was perhaps the most creative spirit of his time; and his greatness must rest always on his character. He is one of those writers whose books must seem forever auxiliary to the man, and who was read because he was trusted and appreciated. If Europe measured him by what he thought, he measured himself by what he had hoped to achieve.

No man ever examined himself more rigorously, but in no introspection do we feel so little feverishness with so much interest in self, and so much knowledge of society. There is a central figure to Voltaire's career, and one must always return to it; he is one of the few great minds in history who really enjoyed life.

Arabian Sunrise

By Henry Filmer

IN THE EARLY SUMMER of 1918 the reviewer was stopping in London at the Washington Inn, a haven for American officers passing through. One Sunday at lunch he fell into conversation with one of George Creel's men just back from Egypt and Palestine.

The newcomer disclosed that he was on his way to America with one of the greatest stories of the war, about the British campaign in Arabia and a man named Capt. Lawrence. One overheard a great many "Greatest Stories of the War" while traveling back and forth on the Western Front, but the story told that Sunday in the Washington Inn was different. There was the glamour of the East in it, of the desert, of Bedouins and of a modern knight in shining armor. There was no heroine but, then, the war was a man's world. When we parted we introduced ourselves. "My name is Thomas," the other said, "Lowell Thomas."

Lowell Thomas returned and told his story not only to America, but to England and the world, and in the telling of it helped to create the Lawrence legend. You have heard it from Thomas and from Lawrence's companions and from Lawrence himself and the legend has grown from a newspaperman's tale to epic proportions. Now Antonius, an Arab, comes and tells us the story, and of Lawrence's part in it from the Arab side, bringing the fabulous elements into historical perspective.

THIS REVIEW cannot escape being personal and perhaps the personal equation may help the better to explain the background of the book. The scene shifts to 1922; there is sometimes as much of a pattern in life as in a play.

A reception is being given at Government House in Jerusalem by Sir Herbert Samuel, British High Commissioner for Palestine. Most of the great and near-great in the Arab and English worlds of the Near East are there: Sir Gilbert Clayton, who oversaw Lawrence's activities as chief of intelligence in Egypt; Sir Ronald Storrs, once Oriental secretary at the British Residency in Cairo, through whose hands passed many of the threads of the Arab revolt; Arabs from the desert across the Jordan, who fought with Lawrence, and George Antonius, destined to be the historian of the Arab national movement and of the parts the principal guests of that evening had played in it.

GEORGE ANTONIUS

Born in Syria, educated at Cambridge University, Antonius came to know them all: Clayton, Storrs, Feisal, Abdullah and many others. Along with this intimate knowledge of the leaders of the Arab drama, he has brought a peneterating research and high scholarship to his task as the chronicler of a great national movement, which have made this book the most brilliant contribution to our knowledge of the Arab cause which has hitherto appeared in English.

You will find in it a great deal about the origins of the Arab national movement in the nineteenth century and of the part American missionary enterprise played in its germination. You will also find the first complete attempt to be published in English of British pledges of independence to the Arabs made during the war, as well as the first critical account from the Arab side of Lawrence's contribution to the Arab revolt. You will find incomparable pictures of the principal actors of the drama, including, in particular, Lawrence and Storrs. If you are interested in the settlement of one of the most perplexing problems which the British have to face in the Near East, namely Palestine, there is material here in rich profusion, set before the reader by one of the keenest minds of the Arab world.

The high-mindedness of the author is best reflected in his reaction to overtures from Germany for the German publication rights of his book. Toward the conclusion of his book the author remarks:

> "The treatment meted out to Jews in Germany and other European countries is a disgrace to its authors and modern civilization; but posterity will not exonerate any country that fails to bear its proper share of the sacrifices needed to alleviate Jewish suffering and distress. To place the burden upon Arab Palestine is a miserable evasion of the duty that lies upon the whole of the civilized world. It is also morally outrageous. No code of morals can justify the persecution of one people in an attempt to relieve the persecution of another."

Mr. Antonius has made it a condition of his assignment of the German publication rights of his book that the translation should omit no jot or tittle of the text, thereby making it unlikely that the book will ever appear in Nazi Germany. As yet the dictators have not, however, proscribed the book for us, and while it is not yet five minutes to 12, you had better read it while there is still time to breathe the spirit of a sensitive, cultured mind.

"THE ARAB AWAKENING," by George Antonius. (Lippincott.)

Two Lost Opportunities

"THE FABULOUS INVALID," by Moss Hart and George S. Kaufman. (Random House, $2.)

"MISSOURI LEGEND," by E. B. Ginty. (Random House, $2.)

ON LITTLE or no provocation today's theater progressive will gladly launch a discussion of what he feels are the primary duties of the contemporary American playwright: to tap the resources of native folklore, to study the historical background of his own region, to exploit its local color. Foreign subject matter need no longer be his first concern, just as foreign technique is no longer his slavish model. When a native dramatist follows this praiseworthy line it is unfortunate not to be able to give unqualified applause. But these two plays of the current New York season that do go to American history for their material are not good plays, and wishing will not make them so.

For potentially glamorous material a cavalcade of the New York stage since 1900 could hardly be surpassed. It is the Kaufman-Hart conceit, in using this background, to trace the history of a Broadway theater from its gala opening at the turn of the century through the vicissitudes of actors' strikes, amusement tax, World War, boom days, into degeneration as a cheap film "palace" and a shoddy burlesque house, until finally it falls hopefully into the hands of a group of youthful theater workers for possible legitimate revival. As a single thread to bind this loose pattern the authors contrive to present the march of events through the eyes of the two stars who opened the playhouse and whose ghosts continue to inhabit this beloved spot. By poster slides of Broadway's best-remembered hits over these years and by reminiscent snatches of dialogue the playwrights endeavor to set each changing event in its own glamorous perspective.

A touching chronicle this might have been, appealing to all those in whose hearts the flesh and blood theater will always have a deep and fond corner. But "The Fabulous Invalid" is too slight, too obvious to be affecting, and the material selected to evoke the varying periods is so platitudinous that Mr. Frank Sullivan's cliche expert, Mr. Arbuthnot, seems by comparison a neophyte. A play to re-establish the romance of the living theater, to strengthen the cause of those who hope to return the legitimate stage to its proper place in public affection, remains to be written.

E. B. Ginty, an elderly lady with long years of association with David Belasco behind her, should also have been expected to offer a more finished piece of writing. Jesse James is Miss Ginty's subject, the illiterate, engaging Jesse who was "an outlaw, too, I s'pose—though I never think of m'self thet-a-way," the man who found no paradox in being at the same time both a bandit and a hard-shelled Baptist. There is fascinating, psychological drama in an authentic study of Jesse James' life and the causes that allowed such a contradiction to exist peacefully within one man's personality.

That "Missouri Legend" does not attempt this is no condemnation. The play devotes itself to Jesse's last three weeks, which included a robbery, the rescue of a widow's mortgaged home, a domestic crisis with Mrs. James, an organized posse hunt for Jesse and finally his death at the hands of one of his own band. This stimulating material is dulled down by dialogue lacking any of the heightening beyond strict realism that alone would project it successfully across the footlights, and by characterizations that, with few exceptions, are only mistily defined. It is a real misfortune to find such a veracious and exciting chapter of Americana slighted, if not entirely wasted.

Lady Bradford Leslie's Party Attracts Hundred Guests

Distinguished Artists From New York Appear In Musicale Following Dinner; Foreign Envoys Among Those Present

OVER 100 guests attended the dinner and musicale which Lady Bradford Leslie gave last evening in her apartment at 2400 Sixteenth street. The artists, all of whom came from New York for the occasion, were Henriette Bagger Plum, Danish mezzo-soprano; Helen Schafmeister, pianist, and Mrs. George F. Baker, known professionally as Martha Atwood and formerly with the Metropolitan Opera.

The hostess wore a gown of ruby velvet trimmed with sable and a shawl of old rose point lace which had been in her family for several generations. The guests were seated informally at small tables.

THOSE PRESENT included the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring; the Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos; the Czecho-Slovak Envoy and Mme. Hurban; the Counselor of the Rumanian Legation and Mme. Babes; Senator and Mrs. Henrik Shipstead, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark Bristol, Hector Bolitho, the distinguished English writer and lecturer; Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Frederick Coleman, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest G. Draper and Maj. Bernard Kennedy.

Also the Air Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. George C. Pirie, Ralph Totten, formerly United States Minister to South Africa; Robert Webster, Secretary of the South African Legation; Mrs. Effingham Towsend, Walter

Respite Follows End Of White House Series

Smaller, More Informal Parties Expected After Whirlwind of Roosevelt Functions; 8,000 Entertained in Seven Weeks

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

WITH THIS SEASON'S White House calendar chalking off its last formal function the past week, Capital society now can look forward to a breathing spell. Oh, there will be plenty of partying right on until Lent, but in general get-togethers will be smaller and more informal with probably more diplomatic accent than has been in evidence since November.

Never in Washington history has a White House social schedule provided so many parties in such short time as this year. Beginning December 13 with the Cabinet dinner, the ten functions that long have been annual events followed each other at a lively clip and speeded into the home stretch Thursday evening with the biggest reception of all, the one honoring the Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

There will be entertaining at the Executive Mansion on through this month, of course. Mrs. Roosevelt will continue her afternoon musicales and luncheons, and she and the President probably will entertain at a number of small dinners from now until late spring; but the big seige of handshaking is over for both of them until the round of White House garden parties begins a few weeks from now.

IN THE PAST SEVEN weeks they have entertained around 8,000 guests, and that's not counting the hundreds who have been on hand for Mrs. Roosevelt's afternoon teas and musicales.

Smallest dinner on the official schedule was the one given for the Vice President and Mrs. John Nance Garner. Eighty-two guests were seated at the horseshoe table for that event, but several hundred came in late for the musicale that featured Latin-American music and folk songs of the type that generally appeal to the Vice President.

CHANCES ARE, there will be more of this type of entertainment on Tuesday evening following the dinner that the Vice President and Mrs. Garner are planning for President and Mrs. Roosevelt. Although the Vice President recently has been staying in his apartment because of a

ALTHOUGH WASHINGTONIANS cry for it, it is perfectly obvious to us that the last thing anybody in this town wants is a rest. The minute things look as though they might begin to quiet down, there is a general shifting from Washington to those resort spots just getting into the stride of their social season. Whether or not you are a persistent complainer of "the rapid pace," or a frank lover of the continuous whirl, we can't blame you for wanting a change.

Mrs. Malcolm Matheson will be hostess to a house party at her home at Cocoanut Grove, Fla., during February and March. Her daughter, Julia Arnold, is already down there and will remain until March 15. Julia's husband, Skee Arnold, will join her this month as will also Kate Scully, who will visit them. Mrs. Matheson's other daughter and son-in-law, Peggy and Fairfax Randolph, left this week-end bound for Cocoanut Grove, and Emily and Millard West will leave shortly to complete what sounds like a knockout house party.

ALSO FLORIDA BOUND this month are Mrs. Carlos del Mar and her daughter, Liz Sturtevant, who will go to Miami Beach on the eighteenth for a two-week stay . . . Adelaide Henry left on the spur of the moment this past week for a ten-day visit in Palm Beach . . . Allie and Bishop Hill will leave the twenty-fifth of this month for a two-week stay in Miami Beach . . . And still further South is the destination of Mrs. McCeney Werlich and Miss Carolyn Nash, who are leaving this week for Mexico City. They plan to be gone about three weeks in all. Incidentally, Miss Nash is entertaining at tea this afternoon . . .

Nor are these all the trips in the offing. As a matter of fact we are beginning to wonder if there is something wrong with the home town since everybody is leaving it . . . Frances Mathews will go to New York to visit Charlotte Mayo Henry on the fifteenth for two weeks. Mary Lib Reyburn may go with her . . . At the same time Mrs. John Magruder will be leaving for Boston, whence she will go to Amherst to see her son, John, then to Vermont to do some skiing before returning at the end of two weeks. Agnes Magruder will be hostess at a buffet supper tonight, and Mrs. Magruder and Agnes will both entertain at a buffet supper on the twelfth . . . Bess Karrick left yesterday for a month's sojourn in Stockbridge, Mass. . . . Mrs. C. H. J. Becker, of Warrenton, is visiting in New York, Greenwich and Providence for two weeks. Daughter Doris and Houston Miller, along with Maggie Byrd, who is leading it, and Jacqueline Meredith will take part in the Virginia Cotillion in Alexandria on the tenth . . .

COMPENSATION for this mass departure from town comes in the pleasing guise of visitors. Polly Cooke Jones and husband, Lewis, who is assistant commercial attache in Athens, Greece, arrived here Wednesday after a two years' absence, for a prolonged visit with Polly's mother and sister, Mrs. Levi Cooke and Virginia. They will be here two or three months dividing their time between Washington and Baltimore, which is Lewis' home . . . Mrs. Robert MacNeil, wife of The MacNeil of Barra, will arrive here tomorrow for a short stay at the Sulgrave Club, where she will entertain a few friends at tea tomorrow afternoon . . . Mrs. Wilder Baker is visiting her brother and sister-in-law, Maj. and Mrs. David Barry, for a few days . . . Col. and Mrs. Littleton Waller, from Meadowbrook, Pa., are visiting Commander and Mrs. Beresford Waller . . . And Miss Elizabeth Taylor, from Little Rock, Ark., is visiting Anne Carter Greene . . .

HERE AND THERE:

Mrs. Millard Tydings went to New York this week-end to greet two members of her family and see two others embark. Rahel and Aldace Walker landed Friday after several months' visit in Brussels with Rahel's father, Ambassador Davies, followed by a whirl of winter sports at St. Moritz. Mrs. Emlen Davies and daughter, Emlen Knight, sailed yesterday on their South American cruise . . . Commander Hamilton Bryan and daughter, Anne, are skiing this week-end in the Poconos . . . The Howard Railleys, newcomers to Washington, have just taken a house in Alexandria. He is assistant to George Grant Mason, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority Board, and Mrs. Railley is the niece of Mrs. Mitchell Palmer . . . Mrs. Barron DuBois will give a tea on Friday for the Colonial Dames, of Washington . . . Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lincoln O'Brien will entertain at dinner on February 15.

Mary Adele Lehman To Be June Bride

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Lehman, of Woodside, Md., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Mary Adele, to Donald Vergne Potter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vergne W. Potter, of Washington. Both Miss Lehman and Mr. Potter are graduates of Central High School, and the bride-elect received her degree from the American University, where she was especially active in music.

Mr. Potter attended George Washington University and is now completing his senior year at National University Law School. Miss Lehman is a member of Delta Gamma National Fraternity, and a charter member of Cap and Gown, women's honorary fraternity at American University.

Mr. Potter has been initiated into Sigma Nu Phi Legal Fraternity and is a member of Beta Chi Sigma Social Fraternity. He is also a member of the Junior Board of Commerce of Washington.

Plans are being made for a June wedding.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

WITH VALENTINE'S DAY about to roll along again, we are imbued with a "hearts and flowers" spirit and feel an urge to distribute gifts in the tradition of the venerated saint. Being also a firm believer in the theory that every home should have a book, we have selected as remembrances a number of volumes, modern and classic, which we give via this column, gratis and with love, to the following members of Capital society:

The British Ambassador and members of his staff: "Hands Across the Tea."

Representative Sol Bloom: "The American Way."

The Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki: "The Sheik."

Mrs. George Grant Mason, jr.: "The Return of the Native," or "As You Like it."

The Soviet Embassy: "Alone."

Clarence Hewes: Whitaker's Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage and Companionage.

Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss: "Music at Midnight."

Lady Lindsay, Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Mrs. Peter Gerry and Mr. and Mrs. Drew Pearson: "How to Raise a Dog: In the City and in the Suburbs."

Mrs. George Howe and Mrs. George T. Summerlin, jr.: "Fanny Farmer's Cook Book."

George Garrett: "Gentlemen Prefer Bonds."

Mrs. S. Kent Legare: "Costume and Fashion."

Myron Hofer and Andrew Wylie: "Life With Mother."

Mr. and Mrs. C. Mathews Dick: "Treasure Island."

The Marquis of Sant'Orsola: "The Woman's Almanac."

Miss Barbara Wright: "How the Other Half Lives."

Attorney General Frank Murphy: "The Importance of Being E(a)rnest."

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dewey: "Tale of Two Cities."

Mrs. Dolly Gann: "The Last of the Mohicans."

The Japanese Ambassador and his staff: "How to Win Friends and Influence People."

E. Pendleton Turner: "Cakes and Ale."

Mrs. Higginson Rogers: "Your Job."

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, jr.: "The Romantic Comedians."

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend: "Half Way in My Song."

Ralph Snowden Hill: "Bachelor Born."

Rebecca Wellington: "The Corpse With the Floating Foot," "Blood on the Carpet," "The Torso Case," "The Human Fiend" and other gories.

William C. Bullitt: "At Home Abroad."

Henry A. Wallace: "The Good Earth."

Frau Hans Thomsen: "Our Feathered Friends."

Anne Hemelt, John Singerhoff Married in Church Ceremony

Uncle of Bride Officiates at Nuptials in St. Gabriel's; Couple Departs on Trip To Florida After Wedding Breakfast

AT A CEREMONY yesterday morning in St. Gabriel's Church, Miss Anne Jennings Hemelt, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Francis Joseph Hemelt, became the bride of John Allen Singerhoff, son of Mrs. John B. Singerhoff and the late Mr. Singerhoff.

The Rev. Theodore M. Hemelt, uncle of the bride, officiated at the 11 o'clock ceremony, which took place before an altar banked with palms and white snapdragons and lighted with tall white tapers.

William Hanan, soloist, and Miss Catherine Weber, organist, gave a brief musical program prior to the ceremony and Miss Weber played the wedding music. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore her mother's bridal gown of ivory duchess satin and net with a court train. The bodice of old Renaissance period lace was set off with finely shirred net sleeves with ruching of lace on the wrists. The bridal veil, six yards long, was gathered to a headdress embroidered with pearls and orange blossoms. A bouquet of white camellias tied with satin ribbon completed the costume.

Miss Lenore Catherine Hemelt, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a frock of turquoise blue faille with a Mary-Queen-of-Scots bonnet faced with orchid velvet to match her slippers. Her old-fashioned bouquet was one of orchid sweet peas.

ANOTHER SISTER, Miss Grace Cecile Hemelt, was bridesmaid. Her gown of Florentine pink faille was accented with a quaint bonnet to match her gown, and she carried a colonial bouquet of Briarcliffe roses.

J. Joseph O'Donnell, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, was best man, and ushers included William J. Tobin, jr., Walter Wood, Frank Ortman and George Carroll, all of Washington.

Following the wedding there was a breakfast in the Carlton room at the Carlton Hotel. Mrs. Hemelt, the bride's mother, was gowned in wood violet crepe trimmed with gold pailletes embroidered into butterflies at the neckline. Her black hat was trimmed with flowers to blend with her frock.

Mrs. Singerhoff, the bridegroom's mother, wore black crepe with a matching hat and a corsage of white roses.

AFTER THE breakfast the couple left for a wedding trip through the South and Florida. For her traveling costume Mrs. Singerhoff wore a coral wool crepe dress, with a brown straw hat, fur coat and accessories to match. Mr. and Mrs. Singerhoff will make their home in Washington.

Out-of-town guests at the wedding included Mrs. John J. Groeninger, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Groeninger, William J. Groeninger and Charles T. Hemelt, Mr. and Mrs. Girard V. Hemelt and Miss Anna Goldback, all of Baltimore; Mr. and Mrs. Harold J. O'Keefe, of Cambridge, Md.; Mr. and Mrs. David B. Singerhoff and Miss Jane Singerhoff, of Elmira, N. Y.

The former Miss Hemelt is a graduate of Immaculata Seminary and Trinity College. Mr. Singerhoff is an alumnus of St. John's College and attended George Washington and Columbus universities. He now is on the editorial staff of The Washington Post.

Ream-Baird Nuptials Are Celebrated

Washington Girl Becomes Bride of Michigan Man

CULMINATING A ROMANCE that began three years ago in Fort Wayne, Ind., Miss Ruth Alice Ream, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Forest V. Ream, of Washington, was married yesterday afternoon to Charles A. Baird, son of Mrs. Charles H. Baird, of Holly, Mich.

The ceremony took place at St. James Episcopal Chapel in Garrett Park, Md., at 2:30 in the afternoon, and the Rev. D. Wade Safford officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was gowned in a violet crepe frock, fashioned street length, on princess lines, with long sleeves, which were puffed at the shoulder and came to points at the wrist; and a high draped neckline. A tiny doll hat of black with violets and a violet face veil completed the costume, and her corsage was of orchids.

PAUL REAM, brother of the bride, was the best man. There were no other attendants. Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pressly Baldridge at 6505 Maple avenue in Chevy Chase, Md. Mr. and Mrs. Armand de Birney, aunt and uncle of the bride, assisted at the reception.

After a motor trip the couple will make their home at the Northumberland Apartments, 2039 New Hampshire avenue northwest.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Flynn, of New York; Mrs. Arthur Kover,, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and Mrs. Charles H. Baird, of Holly, Mich. Representative and Mrs. George W. Gillie, of Indiana, were among the guests.

THE BRIDE attended George Washington University and is a member of Pi Beta Phi Sorority. She and her parents formerly made their home in Fort Wayne, Ind.

Mr. Baird attended Michigan State College and the University of Michigan, where he graduated in 1935. He is a member of the Sigma Delta Chi Fraternity, is a former resident of Fort Wayne, Ind., and was a member of the editorial staff of the Fort Wayne News Sentinel. He resigned last December to become secretary to Representative Gillie.

Congressional Set:

Miss Gene Cox is One Of New Capitol Faces

A Page Girl in the House for a Day, She's Out of Politics Now, Spending Her Time Studying at Maret School

By Elizabeth Ford.

IF CONGRESS WERE on Broadway instead of Capitol Hill, there most likely would be a big electric sign scorching around the dome with the announcement, "Full Houses . . . A New Face Every Minute."

One of the newest faces this season was that of pretty Miss Gene Cox, who had human-interest editors grinding out reams of copy about her when she did a very neat turn as page-girl for a day.

She's out of politics now, and spending most of her time at the Maret School near Connecticut avenue, but her ambition some time in the future is to follow in her father's footsteps. He, as you recall, is Representative Eugene Cox, of Georgia. When she gets to college, she wants to specialize in journalism as well as civics.

The Coxes, by the way, will have visiting them next week-end their son-in-law and other daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Elliot Dunwody, of Macon, Ga.

ANY TIME YOU CALL the office of Representative John Kee, of West Virginia, and ask to speak to his secretary, you'll be speaking to Mrs. Kee, who is a helpmate in the office as well as in the home. Not only does she double-brass in shorthand, but she finds time (her method is a secret) to write a weekly column about our Nation's fair city. It is called "Here and There in Washington" and appears in 23 West Virginia newspapers.

MRS. ROBERT B. Chiperfield, wife of the Representative from Ohio, is an authority on blizzards, or, at least she ought to be. When Representative Chiperfield rushed to Washington for the opening of Congress, Mrs. Chiperfield commandeered the family car and decided to take her trip to the Capital by easy stages. She drove first of all from Canton, Ohio, where they now make their home, to Arkansas, where she used to make hers.

There she ran into this spell of slippery weather you've been hearing about. After several weeks of snow, ice and assorted wind, she decided to give the car the reins and recently joined her husband at the Fairfax Hotel.

ADD TO THE LIST of Senate daughters who help out on Capitol Hill, Miss Kathleen Bulow, daughter of Senator and Mrs. William J. Bulow, of South Dakota. She was graduated from George Washington University last June.

By the way again: Senator and Mrs. Bulow have had as house guests during the week Mr. and Mrs. George Booth, of Sioux City, Iowa.

Speaking of Senate daughters brings us right along to their colleagues in the House.

The Daughters of the House, a group which was formed in January, 1937, got together for the first time this year at a meeting last week. Two years ago there were about 15 members. Now the roll call is 40. In 1937, they first met at the home of Miss Betty Lou Massingale, now Mrs. Hugn Nelson, the daughter of Representative and Mrs. Sam C. Massingale, of Oklahoma.

Other "veterans" of the group are Miss Gladys Kitchens, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Wade H. Kitchens, of Arkansas; Miss Patricia Houston, daughter of Representative and Mrs. John M. Houston, of Kansas; Miss Reba Doughton, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina; and Miss Frances Boykin, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Frank W. Boykin, of Alabama.

DID YOU KNOW before now . . . That Senator James H. Hughes, of Delaware, taught school for four years and that he began to do so at the age of 16?

That Representative Robert L. Mouton, of Louisiana, owns and operates a large azalea and camellia-japonica nursery at Lafayette, La.? And that he's spoken to garden clubs all over the country?

Lieut. John Wood Weds Mary Robeson

Mrs. John Wood, of Luray, Va., is in Blacksburg, where she attended the marriage of her granddaughter, Miss Mary Evans Robeson, to Lieht. John Dudley Wood, son of Mrs. C. Dudley Wood. The bride is a daughter of Dr. Frank Leigh Robeson, a member of the V. P. I. faculty at Blacksburg. The wedding took place in Christ's Episcopal Church, Blacksburg, February 3.

The couple will sail from New York Tuesday for the Philippine Islands.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman A. Eavey, prominent in the social life of northern Virginia, have announced the approaching marriage of their daughter, Lucile Lydia, to Harold W. Crawford, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Crawford, of Waynesboro. No definite date has been set for the marriage, but it will take place early in the spring.

Attended White House Season's Final Dinner

Harris & Ewing.

Guests at one of the most important social events of the week were Senator and Mrs. Joseph C. Alexandria Preparing For Cotillion

Pageantry of Early Days to Be Revived Friday Evening

THE PAGEANTRY of colorful colonial days will return to Alexandria Friday evening with the annual Virginia Cotillion. The event is a revival of Gen. George Washington's birthday ball which was once held in Gadsby's Tavern.

Committee members, as well as patronesses for the dance, are descendants of distinguished Virginia men who gathered at Gadsby's to do Washington honor.

PATRONESSES from the Capital include Mrs. Robert E. Lee and Mrs. D. Buchanan Merryman. Mrs. Lee is the widow of Col. Lee, who bore the name of his famous uncle, the Confederate leader. Mrs. Lee lived as a bride at the Lees' famous estate, Ravenworth, near Alexandria. Mrs. Merryman is a descendant of Peter Montague, who came from England to settle in the New World.

From Baltimore, Mrs. James R. Herbert Boone, Mrs. Pinkney Whyte and Mrs. Tunstall Smith are patronesses. All trace their families back to the original founders of Alexandria. Mrs. Smith, before her marriage, was Miss Josephine Fairfax and is a sister of the present Lord Albert Fairfax, of London. Mrs. Boone and her cousin, Mrs. Whyte, are both descendants of William Herbert and John Carlyle, of Alexandria. The latter was a son-in-law of William Fairfax, and himself heir to a title.

MRS. CHARLES R. HOOFF, a member of the cotillion committee, is a sister of Mrs. Whyte and still lives in the city her ancestors founded. Serving with her is another Alexandrian, Mrs. Charles Alexandria Swann Sinclair, who is a direct descendant of John Alexander, for whom the city is named.

The other two members of the committee are Mrs. John S. Barbour and Mrs. Frederick Richardson. The latter is responsible for the revival of the once-famous cotillion and is a descendant of the Randolphs, Bollings, Lees and Princess Pocahontas.

Others from Alexandria sponsoring the dance are Mrs. Joseph Crockett, who traces her line back to George Mason and Thomas Jefferson; and Mrs. Robert M. Reese. Mrs. Reese's ancestor, Maj. Dennis Ramsey, was an intimate friend of Gen. Washington, and his home, where Washington dined, is famous as the oldest house in Alexandria.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

J. MACKENZIE TABB, JR., and Hugh Kerr, of Middleburg, joint masters of the V. M. I. Hunt Club, at Lexington, Va., have accepted an invitation for members of the college hunt, from the Deep Run Hunt at Richmond to hunt with the latter's pack on Saturday, February 18, at 3 p. m. The drag course to be used for the event will be announced later by Dr. John M. Hughes, M. F. H. of Deep Run Hunt. There will be one of the largest fields of the season riding that day, and a number of members of the V. M. I. Club of Richmond will follow the hunt by the roads in motor cars. The uniforms of the V. M. I. men, the pink coats of the Deep Run Hunt members and the formal black habits worn by the women will make the event a most colorful affair. The visiting hunt and those following hounds will be entertained at the club after hunting with a hunt breakfast.

Mackenzie Tabb and Hugh Kerr will bring a number of members of V. M. I. Hunt to Middleburg early in March—the date has not been set—to follow hounds with Daniel C. Sands, M. F. H. of Middleburg Hunt.

BOWLING HAS been a popular pastime for hunting people since hunting has been at a standstill on account of the weather. Old and young alike have been gathering at the bowling alley to amuse themselves and to get exercise. Among those seen bowling were Mrs. Victor duPont, Mrs. Arthur White, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Skinner, Miss Willett Leach, Miss Bettina Belmont, Mrs. Charles Sabin, Stephen Clark, Mike Kerr, James McCormick, Harris Bucklin, Ridgeley White, Ollie Iselin, jr., Van Cushman, and Harrison Baird.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Massie, of Easton, Md., spent several days in Middleburg recently. The Massies formerly lived in Middleburg. William Hulbert entertained in their honor at dinner at his home, Stone Hedge, on Monday night. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Harry Frost, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur White, and James B. Skinner.

Miss Grace Dickson, of Fairfield, Conn., and Miss Helen Lipscomb, of Leesburg, who are attending the Maderia School, are spending the week-end at Miss Lipscomb's home, Raspberry Plain, near Leesburg.

PAUL MELLON is planning to have an old-fashioned point-to-point race over his estate, Rokeby, between Middleburg and Upperville in the Piedmont Hunt territory, some time the latter part of February. A committee meeting of Dr. A. C. Randolph, M. F. H. of Piedmont Hunt; Daniel C. Sands, M. F. H. of Middleburg Hunt; Fletcher Harper, M. F. H. of Orange County Hunt, and Paul Mellon will be held this week, when they will lay out rules for the event. Point-to-point races were revived in Virginia by Frederick Prince, jr., several years ago. He gave silver cups to the Warrenton Hunt for two races. Since then practically all hunts in Virginia and Maryland which annually held hunter trials toward the end of their hunting season have given these up for the point-to-point races, which were held annually in hunting countries in days gone by.

Mrs. Frank M. Dillard, of Alexandria, spent Wednesday in Middleburg as the guest of Mrs. Daniel C. Sands.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fred have returned from Charleston, S. C., where they have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. William P. Montague.

Mrs. Rosemary Ward, of New York, has arrived at her home near Middleburg for the rest of the hunting season.

Col. and Mrs. William Clifford, of Chudleigh Farm, have gone to Puerto Rico for a month.

White House Program Proves Notable One

severe cold, latest reports have it that plans are going ahead for the dinner; and everybody fortunate enough to be invited is hoping it will go off on schedule. While the Garners entertain rarely, their parties have made some lively pages in Washington's social history.

The largest dinner given by President and Mrs. Roosevelt this season was the one honoring the Chief Justice and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes. There, the new justice, Felix Frankfurter, and Mrs. Frankfurter had a sizeable share of the spotlight that played over the company of 93 guests during the evening.

New high-ranking officials have added interest to several receptions and dinners at the White House this year. The Attorney General, Frank Murphy, made his "debut" in his new capacity at the reception for the judiciary. Arriving ten minutes late caused the event to get off to a tardy start, but that didn't keep him from being the man of the hour.

The new Secretary of Commerce, Harry Hopkins, was part of the Cabinet "parade" for the first time at the reception for officials in Government departments, and was one of the most popular guests in the red room that evening. But the man who really stole the show both then and at the Congressional reception was the Postmaster General, James A. Farley, who held a court of his own—and a big one at that—during the entire party, both times.

THE TENSE international situation had its effect on both the functions planned for diplomats at the White House this season. Ten Ambassadors, including the dean of the Diplomatic Corps, Sir Ronald Lindsay, and six Ministers were missing at the reception for the foreign corps, and even more envoys were absent from the diplomatic dinner. Both events were big enough, however, with almost 1,000 guests flocking to the White House for the reception; 90 in the company for dinner, and several hundred Washington residents coming in later for the musicale that featured Mischa Elman, violinist, and Helen Jepson, singer.

The Congressional reception, which usually stacks up no special honors either as to size or glamor, was more diverting this season than in some time. New faces in the Senate and House added an extra fillip of interest to the occasion. Incidentally, this was the only formal function at the Executive Mansion this year when almost half the male contingent turned out in dinner jackets rather than "white ties and tails."

IN SOME instances, entire State delegations got together ahead of time and arrived, down to the last man, in tuxedos. One Representative declared he could never get re-elected if his constituents found out he was spending his money on a full dress suit. Another said he couldn't afford one; still another said he had "never worn a monkey" suit and never expected to do so.

At Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference a few days later, the First Lady was asked her opinion about whether members of Congress should "do as the Romans do" in the manner of dress and wear white ties and tails to the White House just as men at the other parties do. She refused to commit herself on the subject; said simply that guests could dress as they please.

Personally, I can't see why any member of Congress can't afford a full dress suit. Maybe there's not much occasion "back home" to wear one. But this is Washington. And a formal invitation to the White House still indicates white tie attire.

MRS. LAWRENCE TOWNSEND'S morning musicales will wind up for the season tomorrow when Lotte Lehmann and Lawrence Melchior will be featured artists on a program that should be of red-letter proportions.

Everybody with a capital "E" will be at the Mayflower in the morning to hear the famous singers in their fourth appearance together. Following the concert, Mrs. Townsend will entertain at her usual luncheon, but she will not have among her guests Miss Lehmann. The latter is in deep mourning, her husband having died recently. Mr. Melchior and his wife will attend the luncheon, however, and will be feted at a number of other events during their Capital visit. Tomorrow afternoon, they will be guests of honor at a large tea given by Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, and tomorrow evening, they will be feted at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Sims.

Mrs. Townsend will go to Baltimore on Tuesday to hear Rosa Ponzelle and will go on from there to New York to attend the debut of Mme. Dosia, who will make her debut at Town Hall on Wednesday. Mme. Dosia, "the glamor girl of Chicago opera," was recently presented here.

Admiral Conard's Wife Acts, Writes Plays and Directs Them

While One Hand Has Rocked the Cradle For Her Six Children, the Other Has Been Active in the Drama

By Elizabeth Henney

THERE WAS NO DOUBT about it. The girl could act, and what is more, she could organize and direct. Her family discovered that when she was just a tot, and by the time she was 18, she was not only acting in various capacities, but organizing groups of players and directing plays, with great success.

Now she sandwiches her hobby of directing in between the job of being an admiral's wife, for Mrs. Charles Conard is the wife of Rear Admiral Conard, the Paymaster General of the Navy.

After her early acting career, she went in for Shakespearean drama during her years at Wellesley. Then she took a bit of time out from acting to marry and have six children. During that time, while one hand rocked the cradle, the other hand was busy writing plays—children's plays, for the most part—and she trained her young ones to be the cast.

AMONG HER WORKS are "Godmother to the Rescue" and "A Yedo Flower," the latter being a play with a Japanese background. Now that the children are grown and four daughters married, she has gone back to her hobby. Just recently Mrs. Conard was persuaded to put on a play for the Washington Club and it was such a success that her D. A. R. chapter (the Mary Washington Chapter) has persuaded her to repeat it on February 14. It will be given again at the same club. "The Florist Shop" is the title, and with her daughter, Miss Barbara Conrad, heading the all-Navy cast, the others will be Lieut. Onnie Lattu, Commander Frank C. Dunham, Mrs. Howard Shaffer and Lieut. Norman A. Helfrich.

ARMY NEWS: Service women who do things . . . A number of service wives, Army, Navy and Marine Corps, have been doing their bit for young feminine America by serving on the Girl Scout Council. Among them are Mrs. Edward Goring Bliss (Army), Mrs. Benjamin Cheatham (Army), Mrs. Amos A. Fries (Army), Mrs. Adolphus Staton (Navy) and Mrs. Edward Sturdevant (Marine Corps).

'Tis rumored that out at Fort Myer during the President's Horse Show, Errol Flynn, that swashbuckling, smart-cracking adventurer of the screen, won the admiration of the hard-boiled Calvary officers for his modest manners and lack of braggadocio! . . . They even allowed that they thought he sat his horse pretty well . . . from the Calvary, that came! . . . Errol can really puff up his chest and strut now!

On Saturday, February 18, there will be another Fort Myer junior dance.

Maj. Gen. Robert M. Danford, Chief of Field Artillery, was the guest of honor at a Yale dinner for the class of 1917 last Thursday, and the speaker of the evening also.

NAVY NOTES: Capt. and Mrs. D. F. Ducey will have an "at home" tomorrow afternoon from 5 to 7 . . . On Sunday, February 12, next Sunday, you know, the class of 1920 are really going to get together for that long-promised—or threatened—class party. It will be at the Army-Navy Country Club from 4:30 to 6:30.

On Friday there was another Navy Hop at the Sail Loft, with the usual attendance of a couple of thousand or so. In the receiving line were Capt. and Mrs. E. W. Brown, Commander and Mrs. E. M. Riley and Lieut. Comdr. Harley F. Cope.

A number of people entertained at dinner before the dance. Among them were Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. A. J. Couble, Capt. and Mrs. E. W. Brown, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. W. Crouch, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Harley F. Cope, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. W. B. McHugh, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. G. Fullenwider, Capt. and Mrs. G. F. Clark, Comdr. and Mrs. L. F. Safford, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. P. Abernathy, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Bay, Comdr. and Mrs. Louis Dreller, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. F. Helmkamp, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. P. E. Pendleton, Capt. and Mrs. Harry A. Ellsworth.

THE MARINE SITUATION: Maj. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, Commandant of the Marine Corps, was the ranking guest on Thursday evening at a dinner given by Capt. and Mrs. Cornelius P. Van Ness, before the Army-Navy reception at the White House.

Other guests at the dinner were Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Seth Williams, Miss Elizabeth Ray Williams, Capt. Robert H. Williams and Capt. Robert E. Hill.

Harry Lowes To Make Home In Washington

Couple Married in Church Ceremony At Philadelphia

OF INTEREST to Washington residents is the marriage of Miss Pauline Fleury Roome, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. William Oscar Roome, jr., of Philadelphia, and Harry Lincoln Lowe, jr., which took place last evening in the Church of the Messiah, Philadelphia. The bride's father, who formerly was rector of Emmanuel Church here, now is rector of the church in which the wedding ceremony was performed. He officiated.

Given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Howard L. Davis, the bride wore a gown of white satin and carried a bouquet of white roses. Miss Frances Covert Roome, her twin sister, was maid of honor. She wore a gown of rose colored taffeta with a veil to match.

BRIDESMAIDS were Miss Marjorie Ann Davis, Miss Louise Taylor, Miss Janet Lowe, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Constance Russell, of Washington, and Mrs. James McClintock, of South Orange, N. J. All were attired in taffeta frocks of rainbow shades with hats of the same color.

Helen Jane Chandler, dressed in a quaint costume of pink taffeta trimmed in blue, was the flower girl.

Robert Lowe was best man for his brother, and ushers included Wallace M. Pennepacker, James McClintock, jr., of South Orange; Fred W. Tarver, Alton Dilliplane and Edward P. Schmidt.

MRS. ROOME, mother of the bride, was gowned in rose chiffon. Her hat blended with the shade of her dress. Mrs. Lowe, the bridegroom's mother, wore a frock of lace and a corsage of orchids.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowe, who now are on their wedding trip, will make their home in Washington. The bride is a graduate of Temple University and recently has been associated with the duPont Co. in Wilmington. Mr. Lowe attended the Drexel Institute of Technology and is now employed by the Government.

Miss Dorothy Evans, Glen Rose Will Wed

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Elizabeth Evans, daughter of Elmer Evans, of Takoma Park, Md., to Glen Rose, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Rose, of Washington. No date has been set for the wedding.

Miss Evans and Mr. Rose were graduated from the University of Maryland in 1937. Miss Evans is a member of Alpha Xi Delta Sorority.

Warrenton Horsemen Receive Entries for Camden, S. C., Show

Many from Virginia to Attend All-Day Event Next Saturday; J. North Fletcher Is in Charge

MR. AND MRS. AMORY S. CARHART—he, the M. F. H. of Warrenton and she, one of the most popular hostesses of Warrenton—left yesterday for Nassau, where they will stay for several weeks. Capt. Richard Kirkpatrick will act as master of the hunt during the absence of the regular master.

J. North Fletcher, who is in Camden, S. C., for the winter with a string of horses and who is secretary of the Virginians' Horse Show there, has sent entry lists to horsemen in Warrenton for the event, which will be held Saturday, February 9. The committee for the horse show includes, besides North Fletcher, Viola Winmill Duffey, Wilhemine S. Kirby, Randolph Duffey, Harry D. Kirkover, Richard B. Boykin and C. P. Du Bose, jr.

Many people from Virginia are planning to go to Camden to see the show, which will begin at 10 a. m. and last all day, with an hour out for recess and luncheon, which will be served on the grounds. Judges for the show will be Henry S. Bell, of Bayside, Long Island, and Christopher M. Greer, of Upperville, Va.

Green Carter is off to his cottage at Fellsmere, Fla., for his annual month's stay. Mr. Carter recently sold Goodstone, the Walter Goodwin estate near Middleburg, to Mrs. Mildred A. Taylor, of Toronto, Canada. Mrs. Taylor has moved into her new home, is settled and receiving visitors.

MR. AND MRS. HARRISON WELFORD, of Sabin Hall, who have been staying with Mrs. Wellford's mother, Mrs. Hill Beverley, left on Wednesday for Clearwater Beach, Fla., where they will visit Mr. and Mrs. Gwynn Taylor. On their way home the Welfords will stop at Columbia, S. C., for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Beverley Herbert.

Miss Edith Corse left the first of February for Jacksonville, Fla., to spend some time with her brother and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Corse.

Others who have "set sail" for Florida the past week include Mr. and Mrs. Melville Bearns and their son, Mel Bearns, jr., Mr. and Mrs. William Streett, Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin D. Spilman, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Newton Brooke and Hubert Phipps.

Mr. and Mrs. John A. Hinckley have gone to Nassau for two weeks.

Miss Mary Rumsey has returned from Sun Valley, Idaho, where she went for the Christmas holidays and is at her home near The Plains where she will enjoy the fox hunting. Miss Ann Nicholas, of New York, is visiting Miss Rumsey this week-end.

E. KENNETH JENKINS is sailing February 9 on the Seven Seas for a cruise of a month with a party of friends to Santa Domingo and other points of interest.

Myrta Dutton Williams Married In All Saints' Episcopal Church; Ceremony Performed by the Rector

MR. AND MRS. JOHN M. SPENCE, who were married last evening in All Saints' Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase circle, will make their home in Buckingham, Va. The ceremony was performed by the rector, the Rev. Henry Teller Cocke. Vases of spring blossoms were placed on the altar and tall ferns and palms formed the background in the chancel.

The bride is the former Miss Myrta Dutton Williams, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Karl D. Williams, of Chevy Chase. She was given in marriage by her father, and wore her mother's wedding gown of rich cream white satin, the round yoke trimmed in duchess lace. The sleeves were leg o' mutton style and the flared skirt terminated in a train. The tulle veil was arranged with orange blossoms which had adorned her mother's veil. White orchids were placed in the prayer book, which her mother also had carried.

Miss Helen Louise Black, of Country Club Hills, Va., as maid of honor, wore a long full-skirted gown of periwinkle blue chiffon, with square neck and short puffed sleeves. Her flowers were pink roses and purple iris. The bridesmaids, Miss Sally Jumper and Miss Virginia Clark, wore pink marquisette dresses, trimmed in lace of the same shade. The necks were high with round collars and the sleeves were short and puffed. Their arm bouquets were of spring flowers. All three attendants wore horsehair hats, tied at the back with periwinkle velvet, and each wore pink lace mitts.

The best man was Alan T. Diebert, and Walter Peter, jr., Robert Loney, Joseph Kohler and Grail Edson were ushers.

FOLLOWING THE ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Williams entertained at a supper at Wardman Park Hotel for members of the wedding party and the out-of-town guests. Mrs. Williams wore sapphire blue velvet. Mrs. Tench T. Marye, or Arlington, Va., mother of the bridegroom, wore black crepe.

Out-of-town guests were Mrs. Walter Rossmassler, Germantown, Pa., Miss Mary Frieland, Riverton, N. J.; Mrs. J. Thompson Cole and Miss Anne Lee Cole, Jenkintown, Pa.; Fred J. Doolittle, Miss Margaret Doolittle, Mr. and Mrs. James F. Doolittle and Miss Dorcas D. Bastian, all of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. J. Gilmore Wilson, Malvern, Pa.; Louis C. Williams and Mrs. William Jennings, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mrs. J. G. Billmeyer.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Miles, of Jocelyn street, are in New York, where they are visiting their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Daffron, jr., and Thomas Daffron 3d, born last week. Mrs. Daffron was formerly Miss Kitty Miles. Mrs. Miles will spend several weeks with her daughter.

MRS. HENRY DeC. ADAMS returned last evening from Richmond, Va., where she visited her son, Randal Adams. Mrs. James Craig Peacock returned earlier in the week from New York where she was the guest of her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Grover C. Kerly.

Mr. and Mrs. Karl Fenning have as their guests at their home in the Chevy Chase Apartments Mrs. Fenning's sister, Mrs. F. J. B. Healy, and her daughter, Miss Emeria Healy, of Cobh, County Cork, Ireland.

The mid-winter exodus to Florida continues, with Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. DeVeau leaving today for Miami. Miss Blanche Pattison left Thursday for St. Petersburg and Mrs. Oliver Smith will go a little later.

Chaco War Veterans In Diplomatic Drama

Col. Acosta, of Bolivia, and Gen. Estigarribia Nearly Meet in Pathologist's Office; Pair Fought In War; Former Would 'Bury Hatchet'

By Nancy Archibald.

A DRAMATIC moment occurring at the office of a well-known pathologist in Washington can be described in stage-hand terms as follows: Action in rapid succession—exit patient Lieut. Col. Victor M. Acosta, of Bolivia; enter patient Gen. Felix Estigarribia, of Paraguay . . . Though the military men fought bitterly against each other during the Chaco War, they were friends long before, and young Col. Acosta longs for a friendly meeting with the Paraguayan Minister when he can "bury the hatchet." . . . The Acostas have been in Washington several months now, and have been delighted by the keen interest in Pan Americanism shown by Capital society. Tall and graceful Senora de Acosta is looking for a studio where she can continue her study of painting, and tiny 3-year-old Maria Eugenia Beatrice, who inherits her mother's blue eyes and blonde curls, is a ballet enthusiast.

COCKTAIL CHATTER: Ra, the Siamese cat with the Siamese name, and who belongs to the Colombian Ambassador, stole the show at Dr. Ortega's lecture on Bogota last week by walking 'neath the legs of the audience, proudly waving his tail aloft . . . finally to be carried offstage, screaming with outraged dignity, by the Ambassador's pretty daughter, Rosario . . . And the buzz of discussion on Hitler's speech at a diplomatic housewarming halted in midair at the arrival of Counselor Thomsen of the German Embassy . . . The disastrous earthquake in Chile will delay the departure of popular Counselor and Senora de Huneeus for a litle while at least . . . And the former Air Attache of that Embassy, Commander Puga, is now Air Chief for his government . . . With the arrival of the newly appointed Brazilian Ambassador, Senhor Carlos Martins Pereira e Souza, and, always provided Foreign Minister Aranha's visit lives up to expectations, the staff will be increased and work doubled . . . Look for a series of brilliant entertainments guided by the lovely hand of Mme. Pereira.

MUSICALE MEMOIRS: Recalling how la Comtesse de Gramont dropped in at Mrs. Townsend's morning concert just long enough to hear the songs of her countrywoman, Greek Mlle. Elen Dosia and the Marquis Capomazza dashed in from the Italian Embassy just too late to hear his favorite Strauss waltz rendered by an old friend, Gaspard Cassado, a pro-Franco Spaniard . . . Speak- of the Italian Embassy, a new secretary, Signor Nichetti, is expected soon. Whether he will replace Prince del Drago, whose engagement has delighted Washington friends, or whether Benedetto Capomazza is slated to exchange posts is not yet certain . . . Other glamour lads who threaten to leave for foreign parts are Baron "Kepi" Schell, of Hungary; Michal "waltz king" Budny, of Poland, and Ivan "Heidelberg" Zlatin, of Bulgaria.

THE MARCH LION this year will be Anis Azer, of Egypt, who returns to the United States for the third time to be First Secretary at the Legation. Will he settle down like a lamb to his bridge and dancing for which he was famed when he was Charge d'Affaires here several years ago, or has his stay in history-laden Berlin changed his nature? Except for season's greetings little has been heard from this doughty Egyptian by his Washington friends. His career reads quite like a travel pamphlet—first stop, Consul in New York, then Secretary to Greece, Turkey, the United States, Germany and return trip to America.

BENIGN BOOK-LOVER Alfonso Reyes, Mexican Ambassador-at-Large, who looks so like Walter Connolly in one of his happier cinema roles, stopped by at the recent cocktail party given by Senora de Ghiraldo, wife of the Argentine Counselor, in honor of Dolly Corbin. Dr. Reyes was accompanied by his good friend and comrade, Senora de Reyes, whose black tam-like hat with azure-blue bird perched on the side was the envy of every woman at the party . . . Somehow the Ambassador found himself deep in discussion with Argentine Naval Attache Godoy on the merits of Mexican hand-wrought silver.

"Indians are artists," Don Reyes declared. "I will tell you about one who was Benvenuto Cellini himself. When Dwight Morrow was Envoy from the United States to Mexico, he built and furnished a house in typical Mexican style at the favorite resort just an hour's drive from Mexico City, Cuernavaca. Well, one day at the humble house of a peon he found and bought a finely worked piece of silver. Shortly afterward he returned and said to the Indian: 'I like that silver plate so well I want to order 24 just like it. How much will you charge?'

"Pondering a few moments, the Indian gave a price for each one that was higher than the cost of the original piece. 'How is this?' Mr. Morrow asked with some slight indignation. "I buy a large quanity and you raise your rate. In the United States the more you buy the less it costs.'

"'Oh, replied the silver artist, in Mexico it is just the opposite. I liked very well creating that first piece, but I know I shall soon be very bored making 24 exactly matching it.'"

Mrs. James G. O'Neill, of New York, is visiting her parents, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Owen Hill.

MRS CARRYL BRYAN left Thursday to spend the remainder of the winter in Florida. She will be the guest of her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Wentworth Boykin, at Del Ray Beach, for several weeks.

Lieut. and Mrs. Herman E. Schieke, U. S. N., are receiving congratulations on the birth of a second son, on January 30, at the Emergency Hospital, in Annapolis. Mrs. Schieke was formerly Miss Hazel Johnson, of Edgewater, Anne Arundel County.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene P. Childs entertained at dinner on Wednesday evening, in honor of Miss Mary Ann Sellmann Hodges, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey Hodges, of South River, whose marriage to Arthur Wallis, of Waterbury, will take place this month.

Mrs. Elizabeth Quinn, of Annapolis, has announced the marriage of her daughter, Miss Ella Alipia Quinn, to Harry Dashiell LeTourneau, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. LeTourneau, also of Annapolis, on Thursday evening, January 26. The Rev. E. Cranston Riggin performed the ceremony. The bride, who was given in marriage by her uncle, James A. Small, had her cousin, Miss Blanch Jewell Colbert, as maid of honor. Wilson Macy was best man.

A reception was held immediately after the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. LeTourneau are now on a honeymoon trip South. Upon their return, they will make their home in Annapolis.

MISS LUCY LEE KNOX and Miss Letitia Knox are spending the week-end with their aunt, Mrs. Pye, wife of Rear Admiral W. S. Pye.

Commander and Mrs. Charles T. Joy entertained Friday evening at a small dinner in honor of Mrs. Edmund B. Taylor, wife of Lieut. E. B. Taylor.

Lieut. and Mrs. James Henry Davis have had as their house guests, the Misses Marie Hall and Agnes Tawresey, daughters of Commander and Mrs. Alfred P. H. Tawresey.

Capt. Thomas Withers, U. S. N., of Washington, is the guest of his daughter, Mrs. Stoner, wife of Lieut. Howard F. Stoner, of No. 4 Taney avenue.

Mrs. Thomas P. Lydig arrived Thursday from Los Angeles, Calif., for a visit of several weeks with her sister, Mrs. Fitzgerald, wife of Lieut. J. A. Fitzgerald, of 22 Thompson street.

Mrs. Robert Welsh, of Waterbury, entertained Friday at two tables of bridge in honor of Mrs. John Ladd, of Summit, N. J., who is the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Woodward Welsh, of Waterbury.

Marietta Park Club To Meet at Jaeger's

Mrs. E. Morgan Pryse, president, of the Marietta Park Woman's Club will conduct the meeting at the home of Mrs. Walter H. E. Jaeger, 616 Whittier street northwest, Tuesday. Assisting Mrs. Jaeger will be Mrs. Thomas C. Atkeson, Mrs. Arthur S. Morrison and Mrs. Harvey M. Heckman.

The program has been arranged by the civics chairman, Mrs. F. J. Fitzgerald. W. E. Cartwright, official of the Sanitary Grocery Co., will speak on the chain store tax problem.

Mrs. Pryse has prepared a paper on Chief Washakie, known as the George Washington of the Shoshone Indians.

Miss Marvin-Smiths' Wedding Plans Made

Francis C. Almirall, of Washington, will be best man at the wedding of Miss Madeleine Marvin-Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Valentine Smith, of Rye, N. Y., to his brother, Joseph Janer Almirall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond F. Almirall, of New York.

The ceremony will take place February 18 at St. Mary's Church, Greenwich, Conn. The bride will be attended by her sister, Miss Oramella Marvin-Smith. A reception at the Smith home will follow the ceremony.

Three Dances To Be Held in Charlottesville

All Will Be Staged In Memorial Gym; 2 Orchestras to Play

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 4.—Midwinter dances at the University of Virginia February 8, 10 and 11 will attract to Charlottesville an unusually large number of visitors.

All the dances will be held in the Memorial Gymnasium under joint sponsorship of the half-century old German Club and P-K Society. "Bunny" Bergnan's Orchestra will play for the opening dance, while Tommy Dorsey's Orchestra will be heard Friday and Saturday nights.

Members of the two dance societies will take part in a formal figure at midnight Friday night. This will be led by Randolph Garnett, Norfolk, president of the P-K Society, with Miss Viola R. James, of Charlotte, N. C., and Robert C. Watts, jr., Lynchburg, Va., president of the German Club, with Miss Barbara Bloomer, Louisville, Ky.

The Thursday and Friday evening dances will be formal, the Saturday closing dance informal. Several athletic events will add interest to the week-end. The chief athletic attraction will be the Saturday night boxing match between the United States Naval Academy and the University of Virginia. Members of the Naval Academy boxing team will be guests for the dance after the bouts.

More than the usual number of dinners and private parties have been planned for the period of the festivities. Some of these will be held at the Farmington Club, some at the Monticello Hotel, others at fraternity houses or at private homes in Charlottesville or in Albemarle County.

New Handbook Holds Tips For Shoppers

Information for the woman shopper is presented in concise form in a handbook titled "Scientific Consumer Purchasing" just issued in a revised edition by the American Association of University Women.

Two new chapters, "Prices and the Consumer's Interest" and "Consumer Co-operatives as a Means of Supplying Consumer Needs," are included by the reviser, Alice L. Edwards, former executive secretary of the American Home Economics Association and member of the A. A. U. W. committee on social studies.

Informative selling, informative advertising, informative labeling are stressed throughout the book.

"It is not generally recognized that the apparent caprice of women's buying results in part from the fact that they are unable to procure accurate descriptions of the construction and performance of goods displayed for sale," the handbook says.

Manufacturer as well as consumer would profit by the more informative method, the book holds, remarking: "It is significant that the advertising manager of a large mail order house has reported that whenever specifications for a commodity appeared in a catalogue sales of that commodity increased."

Another argument is: "The appearance of such phrases as 'thread count,' 'octane rating' and 'will not shrink over 1 per cent' in advertising and on labels indicates that manufacturers are realizing that wide-awake consumers appreciate the value of precise descriptions and standards."

Poet to Speak At Dinner Here

Oscar Williams, poet and editor, of New York City, has been announced by Mrs. Horace Torbert as speaker for the dinner to be given Wednesday for winners in the annual poetry contest of the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women.

Mrs. Torbert, chairman of the A. A. U. W. contest for undergraduates in local colleges, will preside at a dinner which will be given at 1634 I street at 7 p. m. The winners of the contest will be announced.

Mr. Williams' poems have appeared currently in both American and English literary magazines. He was recently awarded a prize by the Poetry Society of America. Mr. Williams will speak on marketing poetry and will read from his own works.

The judges of the contest were Miss Ruth Henderson, chairman; Mrs. Vernon Kellogg and Gustav Davidson.

The art appreciation group of the A. A. U. W. is sponsoring a memorial service in honor of Benjamin H. Latrobe, nineteenth century architect, at St. John's Church Friday at 5 p. m., to which the general public is invited. The group has been studying the work of Latrobe and is climaxing its study with a service in the church he designed.

Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's, will preside, assisted by Thomas T. Waterman, architect with the Historic American Building Survey. Mr. Waterman, who has been assisting architect in the restoration work at Williamsburg, is author of "Early Virginia Houses" and a new book on colonial houses is scheduled to appear soon.

There will be special organ music. A poem written by Latrobe for the original dedication over a hundred years ago will be read.

Mrs. Cecil Wise Honored at Shower In Great Mills

Mrs. Cecil Wise, formerly Miss Mary Darnell, was the guest of honor at a shower recently given her by friends at Great Mills, where she and her husband reside. Forty guests were present.

Mrs. Edward Waring was hostess to eight guests at luncheon and bridge on Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Jesse Norris was hostess to a number of guests at supper and bridge on Wednesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dyson, of Great Mills, entertained at a buffet supper on Tuesday evening.

Mrs. George Lawrence, of Bushwood, near Leonardstown, Md., was hostess to a number of guests at luncheon and bridge Wednesday afternoon.

Phi Delta Gamma Banquets Here

Beta Chapter of Phi Delta Gamma, national sorority for graduate women of George Washington University, held its initiation and banquet last night at the Carlton Hotel. The room was decorated with the sorority colors, black, white and gold, candles and flowers on the table and corsage bouquets for the initiates carrying out the color scheme.

The new members are Katharine Asbury, Marguerite Atchison, Caroline Babb, Agnes Carlin, Clarita Claussen, Bertha Gay, Fern Hull, Mary Macina, Elizabeth Oskin, Helen Roberts, Ruth Sangster, Dorothy Veon and Mary Warren.

Miss Mildred Green, president of Beta Chapter, welcomed the new members, and during the dinner toasts were offered to Phi Delta Gamma by Margaret Gibson, Marian Scott and Helen Fadden.

A social hour followed the banquet. A piano solo was given by Hazel Borden; Florence Rice gave several readings, and a skit entitled "Club Tea" was presented.

Arrangements for the party were made by Elizabeth Fielden, Gladys Anderson, Florence Sifford and Priscilla Holcomb.

Evelyn Davis, well-known dancer, will speak to the group this afternoon at its regular meeting at Columbian House, Twenty-first and G streets, at 3 o'clock. Hostesses for the tea afterward will be Helen Louise Trembley, chairman; Florence Rice, Alice Helen Moore, Mary Henderson, Marian Scott and Laskey Howard.

"COMES A DAY FOR THE CHAMPION ARCHER." Young Val is executing commissions for the ladies this year, with special barbs for penetrating hitherto puncture-proof bachelor hearts!! Because my column is written especially for women (you can come in, too, men, if you wish) this Sunday's "news" speaks mindfully to the girls who are "going in there and pitch" this VALENTINE'S DAY. Now I'm not able to send a Valentine to all you lads and lassies . . . so let my sketch and write-up about each of my shops serve . . . I assure you these will be of more value to you than any Valentine I could purchase.

Emile Jr.

"RIGHT NOW" . . . when your winter "coif" looks a bit bedraggled and a new PERMANENT would put you in "the pink" of condition for spring, along come the EMILE JR. SALONS with an ANNIVERSARY SALE of the EMILE JR. OIL PERMANENT, regularly 6.50 for 5. This wave is unusually lovely, and requires no constant setting. All work is done by experienced operators. 3042 14th St. N.W., ADams 6700. The Clarendon, Va., shop is located at 3020 Wilson Blvd., Chestnut 4337.

U-NI-KWEE SALON

"TO MY SWEETHEART" . . . can be told in clever, interesting "and affectionate" terms, for the tiny little prices of 5c and 10c. The nicest and smartest assortment of VALENTINES I've seen are at THE U-NI-KWEE SALON in the CORRIDOR OF THE KENNEDY-WARREN. No need to look further for you'll find just the VALENTINE for every member of your family, for the "heart throb" or a casual friend. Conveniently located, free parking. Open Thursday evenings.

HUNG FAR

"OH, MY YES" . . . They serve delicious NATIVE STYLE CHINESE DISHES at HUNG FAR RESTAURANT, as well as the popular chow mein, chop suey, egg Foo Young and piquant sub gum combinations. Also HUNG FAR delivers orders to your home. This spot is becoming more popular each day. This "easy to get to" dining spot is famous for serving the finest and freshest of foods . . . it is to your advantage to dine where you are sure of obtaining the BEST. If you're planning a Valentine luncheon or party, call Gertrude Crocker, JA. 1852, she will help you arrange it.

Drive over Memorial Bridge, turn left at cemetery wall, continue 1½ miles.

Lillian Gusack

"UTTERLY FEMININE AND PIQUANTLY SMART" . . . are the precious spring hats being taken from their tissues daily at LILLIAN GUSACK'S. Pastel felts for cruise wear, tiny little straw "dots over one eye," veiled turbans of silk or jersey . . . all colors and head sizes . . . all priced 2.00 and 3.00. If you want a new winter bonnet to "fill in," pick up one now, for as little as 50c. 5022 CONN AVE. Open evenings.

Washington School of Fashion Modeling

"CAN I INTEREST YOU" . . . in a profession that is lucrative as well as enjoyable? THE WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF FASHION MODELING teaches you to model for Fashion Shows, photographs, retail and wholesale houses . . . and if you do not want it as a profession . . . learn correct posture, poise, balance and grace. This fine school under the direction of Thelma Doyle answers a desperate need to Washington women. Call DU. 0404, 1508 CONN AVE. (Entrance 19th St.)

Garrison's

"DRESS UP YOUR PARTY" . . . with the precious VALENTINE PARTY FAVORS at GARRISON'S. For a mere pittance you may purchase paper hats, nut cups, poppers, bridge pads and favors, paper corsages, place cards . . . and many other delightful decorations symbolic of the great saint. You'll find lovely centerpieces, some in the shape of figures containing 12 favors, others in heart or flower shapes. You may rent the large ones for as little as 1.00. Select your VALENTINES from the tremendous assortment at GARRISON'S, they have them from a penny up. Don't forget anyone this VALENTINE'S DAY! GARRISON'S, 1215 E ST.

Normandy Farm

"RAIN OR SHINE" . . . sleet or snow, RIVER ROAD, the road that leads the way to NORMANDY FARM, is ALWAYS OPEN . . . and the fires are always hospitably blazing inside this delightful rendezvous! YES, THEY ARE OPEN ALL DAY AND EVERY DAY ALL WINTER! Orders taken for famous NORMANDY FARM BIRTHDAY CAKES—and canapes for cocktail parties, delivered to your door, all ready to serve. Southern Stelos

"SAID ONE LITTLE STOCKING TO ANOTHER" . . . "Running around used to make me tired and angry . . . but now a run more or less doesn't even aggravate me . . . for I'm sent to SOUTHERN STELOS—pronto—for repairs." So don't feel too badly when your lovely pair of sheer chiffon hose gets a run or a snag. It's remarkable how quickly and skillfully they can be re-knit. Only 15c for the first (short) thread run; 20c for the first (long) thread run; 5c for each additional thread run. Look over your "private stock" and if you've several pairs that need "doctoring" hurry them to SOUTHERN STELOS, 613 12TH ST.

Gude's

"MR. CUPID ON A SIT-DOWN STRIKE" . . . HEADLINES for the fellow who won't send his girl flowers for Valentine's Day. Now I don't say that GUDE BROS had anything to do with the origin of Feb. 14th, but I can't imagine a Valentine's Day without having them very much in evidence. Each year they pop out with new floral designs in corsages, bouquets. Indoor Gardens . . . to be given as Valentine gifts . . . but this year they've surpassed all previous ones . . . for never have I seen such exquisite creations as they are preparing to have for your selection as Valentine Remembrances. Drop in and see these lovely posies or call them to send one out for you . . . Don't forget GUDE BROS., DI. 8450.

The Shoreham

"ST. VALENTINE HAD RHYTHM" . . . if he had not have had, they wouldn't celebrate his day with so many dances and parties. I can't suggest a more romantic spot to go "partying" than THE BLUE ROOM at THE SHOREHAM. Entrancing music, twinkling lights, clicking glasses, excellent cuisine and very special entertainment always means an evening of satisfaction and enjoyment at the SHOREHAM. Your old pal, Barnee, is there with his "swell-elegant" music—and as a special attraction—JOAQUIN GARCIA and his Mexican Continental Marimba Ensemble will play from 5 to 7 in the cocktail lounge and during interludes from 10 'til 1 in the Blue Room. This band is one of the most popular in the East and are foremost exponents of Rhumbas, Tangos and Sambas. For reservations phone ROBERT, ADAMS 0700.

Girl Reserves Survey Needs Before Serving

'Go and See' Plan, Urged by First Lady, Credited With Making 1938 an Outstanding Year in Accomplishment

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Community service based on first-hand knowledge of community needs has been one of the features stressed in the leadership training program of the Girl Reserves of the Washington Y. W. C. A. during the past year. A "go and see" plan such as that advocated by Mrs. Roosevelt in recent talks before women's organizations has been the foundation for all of the work the girls have done.

Miss Mabel R. Cook, Girl Reserve executive in charge of the department here for 12 years, considers 1938 outstanding in accomplishment. With a staff of three members—Miss Margaret Graves, assistant secretary; Mrs. Helen Middleton Smith, and Miss Mildred Chapin, half-time workers—it was decided leadership training for the officers of the 44 groups of Girl Reserves was the most effective way of reaching the 4,553 girls in the membership.

Each group has 11 officers and separate meetings were arranged for the 44 presidents, secretaries, social service chairmen and so forth, in which they were given special training for their duties.

The social service chairmen, for instance, made trips to various agencies where they interviewed the directors, found how the Girl Reserves could serve and planned their programs accordingly. "They learned the wisdom of finding out first how they could help instead of doing what was fun and then looking for someone who could use it," said Miss Cook.

They visited Children's Hospital to see the little patients and the type of soft, lightweight toys suitable for them. They were also shown three closets full of scrapbooks—more than can possibly be used. The result was that the Girl Reserves who made toys for Children's Hospital worked on the kind which were needed and did not add scrapbooks to the already crowded closets full of them.

The chairmen also went through the Self-Help Exchange and returned to explain its operation to their own groups. Several also arranged trips there for other students so they could see for themselves how it provided means for persons to help themselves. They likewise visited the Goodwill Industries, arranged for the distribution of Goodwill bags and to have the movies shown in their schools. They went to Neighborhood House and Friendship House where they learned toys were needed for the day nurseries and books for the libraries as well as jelly for the afternoon lunches for the children.

"Jelly rolls"—parties where the price of admission was a glass of jelly, were arranged to help solve the bread and jelly problem, and toys and books were contributed. All of the work was done from the standpoint of intelligent planning to meet a need, and the young leaders have learned the methods.

Every group of officers did something comparable to that of the social chairmen, says Miss Cook. The entertainment chairmen were divided into units and planned parties last summer for younger children attending Camp Stay-at-Home of the Y. W. C. A. After each party they met to discuss what arrangements might have been improved upon, gaining experience and ideas for planning their own Girl Reserve affairs.

The music chairmen, under Miss Mary Burnett, learned to lead group singing and others were given equally practical training.

The staff members have had the assistance of 121 volunteer workers who have given 4,648 hours of time in carrying out the program. Without this, they could not have done it, says Miss Cook. There are also 46 mothers serving on the Mothers' Council.

In addition to the 4,553 Girl Reserves, there are 422 boys enrolled in the activities program, participating regularly in dramatics and the dances of the Girl Reserve Department. Others attend as guests.

Hadassah Plans Second Term

The Hadassah Institute of Jewish Education planned by the chairman, Mrs. Samuel M. Dodek, has met with such success it will be conducted for the second semester, beginning tomorrow.

Monday afternoons at 2 o'clock it will be held at the Jewish Community Center. The following lecture courses are offered for the second semester: February 6, 13, 20 and 27, Mrs. Hyde G. Buller will speak on "The Novel as a Social Instrument in Contemporary Jewish Life;" March 6, Mrs. John Safer, on "The History of Zionism;" March 13, 20, 27 and April 3, Julius Towster, "The Psychological Approach to World Politics;" April 17, 24 and May 1, Rabbi Henry Segal, "East and West in Zionist Philosophy;" May 8 and 15, Dr. Louis L. Kaplan, of Baltimore, "The World's Enigma: A History of the Jews;" May 22, Mrs. Theodore Spector, "The History of Hebrew Music," and May 29, Rabbi Paul Richman, "The Need for Jewish Education."

Four seminar study groups are another innovation of the Hadassah Institute in its second semester. These will be studies in which the members will meet at the home of the group leader. Mrs. Theodore Spector will lead a group in "The History of Hebrew Music;" Mrs. Joseph Borus, "Jewish History Through Great Personalities;" Mrs. Samuel M. Dodek, "The Survival of the Jew in the World Today," and Mrs. Leopold V. Freudberg and Mrs. David Kushner, "Studies in Zionist Leadership."

Dr. Sells to Lead Shoppers' Series

Beginning tomorrow the League of Women Shoppers will sponsor the second series of four sessions on current labor problems. The fall sesions, attended by 50 league members during the month of November, studied the background and problems of the national labor relations act. This seminar will take up problems in labor legislation before Congress this term. The class will open with a study of the fair labor standards act and legislation which will be proposed to improve its administration. It is planned that later seminars will include discussions of legislation pertaining to the Senate committee on violations of free speech and rights of labor (La Follette Civil Liberties committee), national labor relations act amendments, social security and housing. These are the legislative fronts on which the National League of Women Shoppers will be active during this Congress.

Dr. Dorothy Sells, an authority on social legislation, will lead these discussions. When advisable she will invite technicians to contribute factual information. Dr. Sells is now on the research staff of Brookings Institution, completing her second volume on wage and hour regulation in Great Britain.

This series will begin tomorrow at 2:15 p. m. at the Friends' Meeting House, 2111 Florida avenue. To meet the request of the membership it has been planned to offer the same class tomorrow at 5 o'clock at the Arts Club, 2017 I street northwest.

Postpone Dedication

The dedication of the tree planted at the Masonic and Eastern Star Home in memory of Edith A. Williams, past grand matron of 1932, previously announced for this afternoon, has been postponed owing to the illness of Past Grand Patron Paul B. Cromelin. Notice of the new date of the dedication will be given later.

D. C. Women in Athletics

(This column is sponsored by the D. C. Board of the National Section on Women's Athletics, American Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation.)

By Margaret Davis

ATTENTION of both men and women physical educators here will be focused Saturday on the District Physical Education Association's all-day conference being held at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets, beginning at 10 a. m.

Principal speakers will be Dr. Mitchell Dreese, professor of educational psychology at George Washington University; Miss Alberta Mosscrop, head of the physical education department at Vassar College; and Dr. Jay B. Nash, professor of education at New York University.

THE CAMP COMMITTEE OF THE council for social agencies, and George Washington announces the opening of the seventh camp leadership course to be conducted on Thursdays at the university during its second semester, beginning February 16.

PRIVATE SCHOOL basketball games begin this week between teams from Friends, Georgetown Visitation Convent, Gunston Hall, Holton Arms, Madeira, Mount Vernon Seminary, National Cathedral, and St. Agnes. The opening game is scheduled for Thursday between Friends and Gunston Hall girls and will be played in the usual fashion with teams from each school competing simultaneously at the two institutions.

FRIENDS girls will meet another basketball adversary on Wednesday when a team of ninth graders and a varsity team will go to Baltimore and play the Park School. Those selected to make the trip with their instructor, Caroline Nice are: Margaret Cobey, Suzanne Graves, Mary Hawthorne, Miriam Kriesilman, Marjorie Moffitt, Anne Noland, Anne Powell, and Amy Weston from the ninth grade, and Doris Bruyrich, Patsy Goldsmith, June Hawthorne, Elizabeth McLendon, Nancy Misson, Nancy Shearer, and Helen Smith from the varsity.

BASKETBALL SCHEDULES are also being played off at the local universities. George Washington is in the midst of its intramurals, and American will start its class games next week. The Colonials' badminton doubles will begin Friday. American University is in the midst of tournaments in ping pong and badminton, which are being conducted under the direction of Helen Brundage, "A" club member.

Mrs. Joseph Grigsby a Leader In Organization Work and Art

Active in Educational and Political Circles and a Patron of Sculpture And Painting Here and in Colorado

"Jack of all trades and master of none" is Mrs. Joseph Grigsby's estimate of the talents which have made her a leader in organization work here and in Colorado, her former home—but her friends take exception to the latter half of the old saying.

She came here from Denver, when Mr. Grigsby's business interests brought him to the Capital in the autumn of 1934. She then was a member of the board of regents of the University of Colorado, on which she had served for six years, elected by the State at large. During this period the first women's dormitory was built on the campus of the institution. In recognition of her services on the board of regents, she was made a member of the National Association of Deans of Women, to which she still belongs.

She also was active in the Colorado branch of the American Association of University Women and a member of its State board as chairman of legislation and chairman of education.

She is also a member of the Institute of World Affairs, and a year ago was the only woman among 52 speakers on the program of its Los Angeles convention.

After coming to Washington Mrs. Grigsby was, for a year and a half, director of the division of community organization in the National Youth Administration. She also served as national president of Delta Delta Delta Sorority from 1934 to 1938 and recently has been nominated for the office of secretary of the Woman's National Democratic Club here.

Before her marriage she taught art in the Denver schools and she has continued her interest in both sculpture and painting, in addition to her other activities. She and Mr. Grigsby have two children, Betty Jane and Robert, both students at Paul Junior High School, and they have also taken into their home another child, Bobby Kelly, aged 10, the orphaned son of close friends who had named them his guardians.

Mr. and Mrs. Grigsby came from the State of Colorado to reside at 5201 Colorado avenue here, but soon will move to an old house they are remodeling at Landover, Md. It was once the home of Maj. George Hamlet, where President McKinley spent many week-ends during his administration. Maj. Hamlet was the J. Edgar Hoover of his day.

The house stands opposite Beaver Dam Country Club and is being changed by the Grigsbys from old Victorian to Colonial style. The family will move into it in the early spring and Mrs. Grigsby, who has an interest in gardens as well as in making pictures of them, is looking forward to restoring those on the old place.

Just now Mrs. Grigsby is working as co-chairman, with Mrs. A. K. Anderson, of Alpha Omicron Pi, on arrangements for the convention of District 2 of the National Panhellenic Congress, to be held here February 24 to 26.

Mrs. Raleigh Gilchrist, Kappa Kappa Gamma, and Mrs. John Warlick, Zeta Tau Alpha, are other members of the committee. Miss Marguerite Winant, national president of Delta Gamma, will preside at all alumnae meetings of the congress while it is in session.

Mrs. Grigsby has announced that the delegates to the congress will be entertained by trips to Mount Vernon, sightseeing around Washington, a tea given by the Panhellenic Council at the George Washington University, a coffee at the University of Maryland, and a buffet supper.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY, grandniece of the great feminist leader whose name she bears, will speak at a luncheon commemorating the anniversaries of Miss Anthony and Anna Howard Shaw, to be given February 14 at the Y. W. C. A. by the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters. It will be sponsored by the department of government and the legal status of women of the league.

Casting some reflection on the effectiveness of Cupid's darts, the Valentine's Day topic will be "Uniform Marriage and Divorce Laws." Miss Anthony will discuss those of 1848 and the era of her great-aunt. Another speaker will be Mrs. Martha Gold, an attorney whose effort two years ago for more liberal divorce laws for the District of Columbia met with success.

The Chevy Chase branch of the National League of American Pen Women will hold its regular meeting at 3:30 p. m., Tuesday, with Mrs. Rutland Duckett Beard, 4708 Chevy Chase boulevard, D. C.

MRS. DANIEL S. COOMBS, corresponding secretary of Chapter H of the P. E. O., will preside Tuesday at its meeting at the home of Miss Helen Winter, in the Kenesaw Apartments—and thereby hangs a tale.

The president, Mrs. Rush B. Lincoln, wife of Col. Rush B. Lincoln, has left Washington to join her husband in San Diego, Calif., where he has recently been transferred to March Field. The vice president, Mrs. Sylvia Druehl, left Wednesday for San Francisco, Calif., to be gone until April.

At the meeting of the chapter on Jnauary 17, Mrs. Lincoln was presented with a silver vase by the members.

Another member of the chapter is also "on tour". She is Miss M. Isabel Allen of Kew Gardens, who, with her mother, recently left for a trip to South America.

Chapter H will elect new officers in March.

THE HOTEL GREETERS AUXILIARY has issued original announcements for its dance, to be held February 16, at the Shoreham. They tell their story in a jingle, illustrated with a couple dancing in a frame of gay notes, and the orchestra leader with raised baton, at the foot of the musical line.

Miss Lottie Taylor is honorary chairman; Mrs. Harry Stewart, general chairman of the committee, and other members are: Mrs. Sam Marcus, Mrs. Robert McClintic, Mrs. Elsie Kopel, president; Miss Bess Bauman, Miss Lewis Berry, Mrs. Cleo Spencer, Miss Edna Thompson and Mrs. F. P. Orliello.

Loyal Legion To Breakfast On Saturday

The Dames of the Loyal Legion will hold their twentieth annual breakfast Saturday at 12:30 in the Mayflower Hotel. The affair is given each year in honor of Lincoln's Birthday.

Representative Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois, and Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries will speak.

Barn Dance Given to Aid Symphony

Falls Church Society Dresses Part for Gay Saturday Night Party

PRECEDED BY SEVERAL dinner parties and attended by representatives of both the older and younger social groups in Falls Church, Va., the barn dance which was given in the Madison auditorium last evening to raise funds for the National Symphony Orchestra Association proved one of the gayest and most popular parties of the winter season. While all who attended did not heed the command to wear gingham and homespun, enough were attired in country costumes to lend a most rural and informal air to the gathering. The floor show included exhibition square dancing by Miss Mary Ann Bishop and Kendall Foss, of Washington. Hostesses for the evening were Mrs. Ward B. Freeman, Mrs. Robert Landreth, Mrs. Paul Peter, Mrs. Carl Haglund, Mrs. John L. Harrison and Mrs. T. Swann Harding.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. O. B. Livingston had 24 guests for luncheon preceding bridge, and Mrs. Marie Sisson Ingling hosted a luncheon at the home of Mrs. Lilliam Hicks.

Miss Mary Davenport yesterday entertained a group of her Falls Church friends at her home in The Ontario in Washington, preceded by a luncheon at Avignon Freres.

Five-year-old Ann Vosbury celebrated her birthday with a party yesterday.

MRS. EDWARD F. CARLEY, of Wilmington, Del., who is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Palmer for 10 days has been much entertained this week. Tuesday night Mrs. Buford Bridwell had three tables of bridge in her honor; Wednesday Mrs. S. Parry Grubb gave a bridge luncheon for her; and Thursday Mrs. John Ball, of Dunn Loring, entertained at lunch and bridge in her honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Fenwick and their daughters, Mrs. J. Russell Browning and Miss Catherine Fenwick, have left by motor to spend three weeks at the Gulf Stream Hotel in Lake Worth, Fla. Mr. and Mrs. George Crossman and daughter, Mrs. O. E. Shaw, have gone to Miami, where Mrs. Crossman will remain until March. Her husband and daughter will come north again in two weeks.

Mrs. Wilbur S. Hinman, sr., was hostess at tea Friday afternoon, to tell her friends about her recent cruise to South America. With her husband and daughter, Mildred, of Washington, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Stewart, the Misses Bess and Clara Stewart and Bob Stewart, she was also a dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Styles and Miss Betty Styles. In Buenos Aires the Hinmans visited Henry Stewart, formerly of Falls Church.

Colorful and Exciting . . .

Two words that elegantly describe the Spring Hat Season!

Information regarding these fashions may be obtained by calling National 4200.

So fortunate is woman . . . for she shall inhabit a new spring hat. To lift her spirits and send them soaring! To utterly destroy her old winter personality and build a new one! Scintillating, unusual and as fresh as sixteen!

Whatever your mood, you can match it with a thrilling spring chapeau. There are some that will make you feel demurely sentimental, suavely sophisticated, or very seductive.

Straw . . . rough, smooth, open weaves, fine weaves, plain, or interwoven with gay colors . . . is the leading material. However, combinations, felt, antelope and novelty fabrics are very chic too, and destined to become popular.

Extravagant describes the manner in which designers have used veils. There's a profusion of them! Whooshs over the face, poufs on top, mists floating from turbans and toques, enticingly draped under the chin or streaming waist-long down the back. In fact, many hats have been fashioned entirely of veiling. Rolls upon layers to create a striking effect.

Color, too, plays an important role, in the new spring millinery. It is part of the magic that will make your quest for a hat a lark. As an accent there will be much matching of accessories with the hat, but there will be little matching of the costume as a whole.

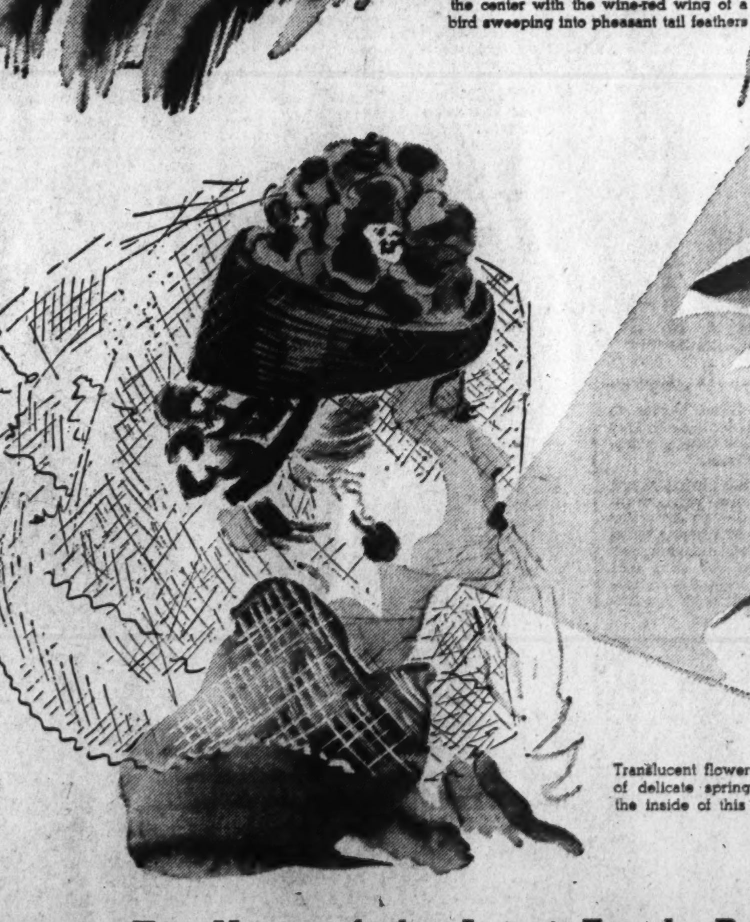
In regard to your individual hat problem, we counsel you thusly: Find the hat that you know is suitable to your personality. If it's breezy or it's romantic, if you make up your mind it's you—don't let those despoilers of fair feminine headgear, your husband or beau, deter you one bit—WEAR IT!

Above—A pinwheel of two-tone veiling whirls atop this frivolously feminine black straw, and floats in a mist about the shoulders.

Left—A new version of the wimple, with bright colored jersey falling from the draped band. In pastel felt.

Left—For those who aspire to suave chic. A wine-red felt bravely caught in the center with the wine-red wing of a bird sweeping into pheasant tail feathers

Below—No compromise with the era. A Gibson Girl sailor with a delightfully deep crown and wide grosgrain ribbon band. The straw is molasses colored interwoven with red and green.



Translucent flowers in a blended range of delicate spring shades sprout from the inside of this black straw.

Antelope, the color of deliciously browned toast, in a large brimmed sports hat that's slated for popularity.

Cruise Trunk Should Carry Costumes for Gales at Sea as Well as Dancing and Shore Trips

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Feb.4.

AT LAST I have traced our little autograph hounds of both sexes to their lair. They meet in Shubert Alley (between Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth streets) each evening just before theater time and regather in the same spot about 11:30 p. m. to compare notes and swap duplicate signatures.

ALICE HUGHES

I should choose Miss Queenie Markowitz, of the Bronx, 32 and chubby, as the queen of the lot. No star is safe from her book and stabbing pen. Miss Queenie has obtained no less than 20 autographs of the singing fellow, Mr. Harry Richman, the bulk being for trading purposes. The crowd I met in Shubert Alley numbered about 50 boys and girls of school age, some not too warmly dressed, either. Miss Queenie seemed the oldest of the lot, but very fast on the draw. After the theater four Harry Richman scrawls were getting one Zorina. The market on Richmans is bearish, but Zorina, evidently, is hard to get.

One little girl named Dorothy Raymond had spent all day and half the night chasing Sonja Henie—and finally got her. While I was talking to these juvenile hunters, several of them lit out after a cab holding Dick Powell, the movie man. But another child called Gertie told me how she had finally nabbed Robert Taylor after waiting at his hotel until 4:30 a. m.

That's what threw me! Why would any bare-headed little girl sit up until dawn to get the signature of a mere movie actor?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—A popular radio hour has now given birth to a new game. If it's like the rest, it is guaranteed, if persevered in, to drive a quiet home evening quietly goofy . . . Mrs. Maria Nelson, 80, relented and let her husband, Alfred, 60, out of jail. It seems she thought he had misappropriated $4,500 from their joint bank account, but he convinced her that he was going to invest it and make them both some money, so she decided to turn Alfred loose. She is a very determined old lady. As is usual with such people in the depths of our city, they live practically in poverty. Strange old city jetsam are not rare here, either . . . It took the drive against infantile paralysis here to bring "Robby" back into the spotlight. Shucks, you remember "Robby." Frances Robinson, secretary to Gen Hugh S. Johnson, and well known during his tenure as head of the late NRA. Well, "Robby" is still on the job—still a ball of fire, the general's good right arm, as well as his ears.

Eva Ortega, the singer in "Set to Music," the Noel Coward hit, is now patronizing some of the places where she used to warble for hire. I saw the Spanishy beauty a few nights ago at Le Coq Rouge (that's the name of a snooty boite, or bar) looking lovely in a Grecian gown of pleated chiffon, with a braided sash of bright green and blue. My gracious, sure must be wonderful to be singing the songs in a hit show!

Honest to John, there's a life-sized soap mannequin in a shop window here. She is modestly called "Ermyntrude, the Ivory girl," and Mr. Archie Parzini created her by art and main strength.

Wonder how San Francisco is getting along with our party-tossing author, Elsa Maxwell? It's her home town.

Now it is the typist's turn. The Fourth Annual Stenographers' Ball comes off here on the eleventh, and the queen of the shindig will be crowned by Billy Rose at his Casa Manana on the twenty-eighth. I don't like to doubt the good faith of a big party, but I'll always be afraid the "fix is in," when one queen is chosen from thousands of New York's key-bangers. An old skeptic, but can't help it.

Skin Requires Daily Care on Winter Cruises

Protectice Cream Found Necessary to Prevent Chapping, Irritation

By Carolyn Abbott.

MID-WINTER cruises play havoc with your complexion, unless you give your skin daily care. Sailing into a brisk, salty breeze after being shut in steam heated houses or offices, you will find that your skin has become tender, sensitive to change and will chap or burn easily.

The first few days on the ocean the weather is likely to be cold and blustery. And unless your skin is protected it will become rough, the make-up will smear and you will feel generally uncomfortable. To prevent chapping and irritation, apply a good lubricating, protective cream. There is a special cold weather, polar cream that keeps the skin soft and smooth in windy, zero atmosphere. This may be smoothed on over your usual make-up or be used as a base.

Should Change Cream

As soon as you reach warm waters, change this cream to one with a more oily base. Keep a foundation cream on to prevent sun wrinkles, and squint lines. And if you are determined to get a sun tan, remove all your make-up except lipstick and apply a good sun tan lotion or oil. The oil eliminates burning, or blistering and helps you to brown smoothly. Take your sunbathing by degrees, for the skin is unaccustomed to the hot rays of the sun. Rub the oil on the shoulders, neck, arms and legs, otherwise you will tan unevenly. Besides looking like a spotted toad on the trip, you will find when you return to the city and the splotched tan begins to fade that you will look more like a half baked lobster than a beautiful, golden glow girl.

When the skin begins to darken from daily exposure, you should change your powder to a darker shade. Lip stick and rouge should be at least one shade darker, for the color tones of the skin will change from the light bluish undertones to the pinker or brownish undertone.

In addition to the protective foundation creams and tanning oil, your beauty kit should be equipped with a good cleansing cream, a night cream that supplies natural oil to the skin, a manicure set, complete with nail file, clippers, scissors, emery board, polish remover, cuticle oil and polish.

Must Protect Hair

Protect your hair from too much sun exposure, if you want to prevent it from becoming brittle and dry. While on deck or on shore during the hottest part of the day, wear a hat or bright colored kerchief on the head.

Keep your coiffure fairly simple while on the cruise. It takes a lot of time to visit the ship beauty parlor each day in order to keep an elaborate hair-do looking presentable. A short bob will be much easier to keep than the shoulder length. Salty air takes the curl out of your hair, so if your curls are loose get a new permanent wave before you start on the voyage.

Contemplating a cruise? If so, now is the time to stock your sea trunk with sturdy costumes that will see you through a lusty gale, and through sight-seeing trips on shore, swimming, tennis, dining and dancing aboard. The wardrobe need not be elaborate, but it must be appropriate—that means casualness for day time and glamour for evening. Chiffons, crisp nets, colorful cotton and rayon fabrics are ideal materials for evening frocks for they require very little packing space. Noncrushable, wrinkle proof, the sports outfits shown above are smart for day time wear.

Upper left—A fitted, cardigan terry cloth jacket in royal, black or white is designed to wear over swim suits or shorts.

Upper right—A tailored rayon dress in a bright scroll design. Buttoning smoothly up the front, the skirt has just enough flare to permit ease of movement.

Lower left—A versatile play outfit in denim for deck games. It consists of pleated shorts, a handsome leather belt and a circular skirt that zips up neatly or can be thrown about the shoulders as a cape.

Lower right—A smart two-piece dress of mumere tweed. This type of dress is excellent for shore excursions and to wear the first day on ship.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Disillusioned in First Great Love, Girl Has No Interest in Men; Will She Ever Feel Again?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I wonder if a person ever really gets over a true love? I went steady with a boy for a year and loved him very much. He said I was everything he admired in a girl and that he wanted to marry me, but there were (and are) many obstacles in his path. Then, suddenly, he stopped calling. I had no idea why, and naturally I couldn't put a direct question, so my thoughts just went in circles.

After three sad, lonely, heartbreaking months he came to call and asked for a date that night. But I was busy. This happened again, twice in succession, with the same results. He had started going with another girl in the meantime, and seemed to think as much of her as he once had of me. I think he felt sorry for the way he had treated me and thought he could help along a little, by being friendly.

Once in a while he calls and asks my opinions on different things, and today we are friends, nothing more. After he had broken away so abruptly in the first place, I started immediately going out with others, so that I wouldn't fall into despair. That's why I was busy when he asked for dates. All this is by way of explanation. Here is what's worrying me: I can't seem to get seriously interested in any other person, since I recovered from my love for him. It is actually true that I no longer love him. I have no feeling toward him at all. I am not even angry. Life is too short to waste it in anger at anyone, for any length of time.

I am only 21, which is quite young, I suppose, to wonder if my future is to be traveled alone; but really I do worry about the way I feel. I just don't feel interested in the opposite sex except as friends and as escorts for an evening. I've loved before this last love and that's why I wonder about myself now. I believe I'd much rather be in love, even unhappily, than have this calm, empty, serene feeling.

I'm not searching for a husband and I don't look on marriage as a state to be achieved so that one can sit back, relax and let the world go by. I'm just wondering if my feelings are dead, or if they are just vacationing for a while. I've never felt this way before—so apart from things. I always have a good time at parties and most all social affairs. It's only after I am alone at home that I feel let down. I am often complimented on my appearance and try to be pleasant and attractive. What do you think of it all?

Sincerely, HENRIETTA.

Lull in Storm

DEAR HENRIETTA: There is nothing particularly significant or portentous about the present becalmed state of your emotions. After the storm, there is always the lull—for which the storm-tossed wayfarer should be duly grateful. I think you may have been rather severely shocked and bruised by the once deeply loved young man's defection or treachery—whichever you choose to call it—to the extent that you may not ever again yield your heart quite so fully and freely on first invitation. Yet this does not mean that you won't love again; and all the more deeply and perhaps all the more wisely, as a result of this first heartbreaking, disillusioning experience.

Don't make the mistake of supposing that romantic disillusionment is necessarily a devastating experience; that it strips the sufferer of all that makes for happiness, and leaves him a beggar facing an empty future. It can be, and should be accepted as, an educational experience, teaching the difference between the true and the false, in human beings as well as in human emotions. After all, what is "illusion," which first we must possess before we can be disillusioned?

My dictionary defines illusion as "unreal or misleading image; false impression; misconception; perception which fails to give the true character of an object perceived." Freely translated, it is a rose-colored cloud of beautiful untried theory and poetical fancy, existing in the mind of youth, which gets between him and the manifold aspects of life with which he is coming to grips for the first time; which camouflages them out of all semblance to basic reality, causes him to suppose they are other than they are, and to expect quite different things from them than he is likely to receive.

Thus defined, don't you think it is a rather good thing to have done with? Once the mists of illusion have been swept away by some painfully instructive experience, the person is better implemented than before to engage with profit in the business of living. upposing that experience has had to do with an affair of the heart—as in your case—the person may withdraw a little in spirit, for a time, from the opposite sex. But that is merely a reflex, instinctively self-protective sort of reaction. Nature itself is aiding him to get his bearings, his second wind, a truer perspective born of digested experience, before spurring him into action again.

That "let-down" feeling which overtakes you at the end of a pleasant evening, when you find yourself alone, is almost universally shared by persons newly out-of-love. It means, simply, that you are sensing the difference between being vitally linked to another's life, and being largely on the outside of other lives. And if you "don't feel interested in the opposite sex except as friends and as escorts," it is only because you have not as yet met the man who has "what it takes" (as we say in the vernacular), to set your heart palpitating all over again.

From now on you're bound to be a bit more discerning, a trifle warier and more self-contained; holding yourself more aloof, and the rank-and-file of men more at arm's length, so that the next love—when it comes—will have to be something more nearly approximating "the real thing," if it is to get under your guard. And that is all to the good; just as it should be. You have nothing to worry about in the meantime, and I advise you to relax and enjoy that "calm, empty, serene feeling," while it lasts.

Recipe Contest Takes as Theme Bought Puddings

Have you ever discovered some ingenious and non-detectable method of dressing up a packaged pudding so that it tastes absolutely oven-fresh? Or have you recently stumbled upon a clever fruit or chocolate-nut sauce that so disguises the taste of an inexpensive bought pudding that your guests exclaim, "How do you ever get time to bake such delicious desserts?" If you are one of those fortunates who can whip up epicurean sweets from a 5-cent dessert package, enter a recipe for your formula at once. The new Post recipe contest has as its theme—"Tricks With Packaged Puddings."

Mrs. Margaret Belair, 118 South Fairfax street, Alexandria, Va., has requested that recipe competition be centered around unusual methods of making the packaged pudding tantalizing. Have you a saucy fig, jam or cherry coverlet for a bought cornstarch pudding? Or a trick of tossing marshmallaws or nut meats into a chocolate pudding? If so, mail a kitchen-tested, carefully written recipe at once to Alice Clayton, The Post Food Editor. Contest closing date is February 11. Cash awards include first prize, $3.00, a second prize of $2.00, and three additional prizes of $1.00.

Private Work Here Triples January, 1938

Value Is $3,572,461, Gain of $2,452,901; December Bettered

Heralding what is believed the beginning of another year of great building activity, a January report on private construction and repairs in the District of Columbia, made public yesterday by District Building Inspector John W. Oehmann, discloses a total valuation for such work amounting to $3,572,461. The January, 1939, figure reflects a gain of $2,452,901 over the total for the month a year ago and a $1,434,121 advance from the volume of December, 1938.

Of last month's valuation, the sum of $3,136,150 represents new building in Washington, and $436,311 alteration, modernization and repair of private property. Valuation of new construction in the different sections last month was: Northeast, $218,400; Southeast, $406,300; Northwest, $2,511,550; Southwest, none. Value of repairs by section was: Northeast, $18,900; Southeast, $12,130; Northwest, $398,631; Southwest, $6,650.

In the past month, Inspector Oehmann's office issued permits for erection of 184 single-family dwellings, costing $1,133,650, and 14 apartment buildings accommodating 130 families and representing an expenditure of $392,000. Of the dwellings for which permits were written last last month, 34 were of row, 98 detached, 22 semi-detached, and 30 community type. Permits were granted for construction of 210 brick and no frame structures during January. Four brick and nine frame buildings were razed during the month.

In January, 1939, the office also issued permits for $901,188 worth of municipal work, including a court building costing $450,000, a reservoir valued at $350,000 and two repair projects amounting to $101,188. During the past week, permits were approved for the following:

The Doctors' Hospital, Inc., ten-story and basement reinforced concrete hospital at 1815 I street northwest, cost, $800,000; Lee Paschall, Richmond, Va., builder; Francisco & Jacobus, New York, architects.

District of Columbia Government, seven-story, brick, steel and concrete ward building and one-story brick, steel and concrete heating plant at Gallinger Hospital, Nineteenth and C streets southeast.

District of Columbia Government, three-story, basement and attic, limestone faced court and office building at 400 E street northwest, cost, $450,000.

St. Martin's Church, one-story brick and concrete church building at 1902 North Capitol street, cost, $95,000; Davis, Wick, Rosengarten Co., Inc., builder; F. V. Murphy architect.

Philip Milstone, installation of new elevator and improvements to property at 937 D street northwest, cost, $72,000; G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Israel Reiskin, three-story brick and cinder block apartment building at 551-557 Lebaum street southeast, cost $40,000; G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Mary L. Hall, seven two-story brick and cinder block dwellings at 414-426 Nineteenth street northeast, cost, $35,000; Louis H. Hall, builder; G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Howard Homes, Inc., eight two-story brick dwellings at 47-61 Franklin street northeast, cost, $32,000; Clarence W. Gosnell, Inc., builder; John D. Cobb, architect.

Eugene H. Phifer, four two-story brick and cinder block apartment buildings at 4000-4012 Edmunds street northwest, cost, $30,000; Dana B. Johannes, jr., designer.

Elite Laundry Co., three-story brick and concrete rug cleaning building in the rear of 2117 Fourteenth street northwest, cost, $30,000; Skinker & Garrett, builders; James F. Grant, architect.

Washington American League Ball Club, two-story brick and concrete toilet addition at 2015 Georgia avenue northwest, cost, $28,000; George A. Fuller Co., builder; N. W. Barrett, designer.

Federal Service Finance Corporation, additional story on existing office building at 718 Jackson place northwest, cost, $18,350; E. Burton Corning, architect; Warren Spencer, Inc., contractor.

Carl Iver Johnson, three two-story brick and cinder block dwellings at 5501, 5435 and 5431 Broad Branch road northwest, cost, $18,000.

Woodward & Lothrop, erection of cooling tower on roof of building at Tenth and G streets northwest, cost, $17,000; the Marley Co., Kansas City, Kans., designer; Mehring & Hanson Co., contractor.

Clyde L. Fowler, two-story brick veneer dwelling at 1506 Otis street northeast, cost, $4,500.

Pichler-Richmond Construction Co., two 2½-story brick and concrete block dwellings at 3907 and 3909 Northampton street northwest, cost, $11,000; William Crusemire, designer.

Week's News in the Real Estate Field

By Thomas M. Cahill

Amazing growth of residential construction in the local metropolitan area was reviewed last Thursday at a luncheon meeting of the home builders group, Washington Real Estate Board at Raleigh Hotel. Statistics from the board submitted at the meeting over which W. O. Cooley, group chairman, presided, showed that during the past four years, 17,787 one-family dwellings were erected in the District, Arlington, Va., and Montgomery County, Md. In the same period, 15,579 units in multi-family structures were also provided for the area.

President Melvin C. Hazen, District Board of Commissioners, addressing the assembly, said private real estate was carrying a larger proportion of the tax load than it should and that Federal holdings locally, if assessed on the same basis, would produce approximately $12,000,000 annually in tax revenue. Other speakers were Real Estate Commissioner Harold E. Doyle, President Francis A. Murray, of the real estate board; Lewis T. Breuninger, A. S. Gardiner, sr., Morris Cafritz, H. L. Rust, jr., William J. Flather, jr., Edward R. Carr, James McD. Shea, Arthur C. Houghton and William C. Miller.

Reports from the ticket committee for the sixth annual dinner-dance of Washington Real Estate Board at the Mayflower Hotel, February 21, indicate that sale of tickets will be closed much sooner than originally planned. Approximately 350 of the accommodations for 500 persons have been reserved.

Milton F. Schwab, chairman of the committee, has assisting him the following: F. Latimer Barkley, J. McKenney Berry, jr., Grant Boss, Edward H. Brent, Richard J. Carr, Paul D. Crandall, E. Spencer Fitzgerald, James Franklin, W. M. Gardiner, L. T. Gravatte, jr., Charles S. Gunn, H. Ray Heacock, Arlie Johnson, F. Moran McConihe, Robert F. Lammond, F. E. Middleton, jr., A. Jasper Moore, Henry W. Morgan, jr., Frank Paroni, J. G. Pascoe, H. M. Ritterbush, Thomas W. Sandoz, William Schwartz and Horace W. Talley.

Every effort is being made by the committee in charge to make this affair surpass similar parties held in the past under the sponsorship of the board. Heading the committee is J. Hawley Smith with the following members assisting: J. Lee Donnelly, Richard D. Stimson, S. S. Spruce, Thornton W. Owen, Charles L. Norris, J. C. Weedon, jr. and H. C. Cryer.

F. Eliot Middleton, a past president of Washington Real Estate Board, has concluded a Florida vacation.

Manager John F. Webster of the Northern Virginia office of Boss & Phelps, is at his desk after recovery from illness.

Harvey A. Lee has been appointed to take charge of the property management department of Frank S. Phillips' office. Mr. Lee was educated in Detroit, Mich., and has been actively identified with the building industry in that city and in Cleveland, Ohio, since 1923. He was also associated with the Potomac Electric Power Co.

The February luncheon meeting of Washington building congress will be held tomorrow afternoon, at 12:30 o'clock, at Lafayette Hotel. Dr. Wilson Compton, secretary and manager of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, will talk on "Small Homes Needs and Opportunities." Every member of the congress, regardless of his business connections, will be vitally interested in what Dr. Compton has to say, it is announced. His organization has made some interesting experimentation in low-cost construction in its series of demonstration houses built just outside of Washington.

The office of Rufus S. Lusk, secretary of the Building Owners and Managers Association, at 1508 H street northwest, is being enlarged.

Robert P. Scott is now associated with the office of Edward R. Carr and the Barnaby Woods Development Co.

Liberalization Steps Up FHA Activity

2,552 Applications in 1st 12 Months; January 278% Over 1938

In the year following liberalization of the national housing act, in February, 1938, applications for insurance of mortgage loans on 2,552 new small homes have been received by the District of Columbia insuring office of that agency, Henry H. Dearing, director of the local office, announces.

Applications received during the 12 months aggregated 3,530 for a total of $20,127,800. Mr. Dearing attributed the activity of his office to the more elastic provisions for financing homes, included in the national housing act by the amendments.

"During the 12 months prior to the first anniversary of the passage of the amendments, our volume of mortgage insurance applications showed a marked upturn. Significant is the fact that 72 per cent of all applications received involved new home construction projects.

"Also, the contrast between January, 1938, and January, 1939, is another indication of the growing popularity of the insured mortgage system. In January, 1938, we received 66 applications for mortgage insurance, involving loans totaling $402,000. In January, 1939, the figures were 249 applications covering $1,402,700 of mortgages.

"Thus, exactly one year after the new amendments went into affect figures for January showed an increase this year of 278 per cent in number and 248 per cent in dollar volume."

Throughout the Nation during the same period, FHA reports 100,000 individual homes have been built or started, all of them approved before construction. At the present time FHA is handling about three times the business it was transacting a year ago. During January, throughout the country, construction was started on dwelling accommodations for more than 10,000 families, financed with FHA-insured mortgages.

Dungian, Inc., to Build

D. J. Dunigan, Inc., will build seven two-story brick dwellings at 5118-5130 North Capitol street, at an estimated cost of $35,000. G. T. Santmyers is the architect.

To Erect 9 Homes

Jacob Roberts plans construction of nine two-story brick dwellings at 5103-5117 Fourth street northwest and 341 Gallatin street northwest. Plans are prepared by G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Rising Wages Boosting Home Building Costs

Buyers Getting Better Values, Though, Survey Of 18 Cities Shows

Minneapolis, Minn.—The cost of building a modest home is advancing at a rate of about $10 per month. A home which cost $4,000 to build at 1937 average wage rates and materials prices in 18 United States cities cost $4,013 to build in January, 1938, $4,116 if built in September, 1938, and $4,111 at January, 1939, cost levels. This is an increase of almost 4 per cent from 1937 averages and of 3½ per cent since January, 1938, according to an analysis by Northwestern National Life Insurance Co.

Home building costs are now within 1½ per cent of 1926-29 boom-time levels, the study shows; the average hourly rates for skilled building labor are 7½ per cent higher than the 1926-29 average rates, and common labor hourly wage rates in January, 1939, were 24 per cent higher than in the 1926-29 period. Yet the home buyer is getting more for his money than ever begfore. the report states, due to a combination of improved methods, higher standards, new inventions, and lower financing costs.

In July, 1938, residential building volume forged ahead of the corresponding month of 1937 for the first time; each month since then has been ahead of the corresponding month of the previous year, with the last half of 1938 showing a 50 per cent increase in dollar volume over the corresponding half of 1937. January activity indicated a continuation of the pace, with a residential building volume of well over the billion dollars forecast for 1939. At the same time, residential foreclosures ran approximately 25 per cent less in 1938 than in 1937, the report points out.

In seven out of the 18 cities covered by the report, current home building costs are above their 1926-29 levels. The seven cities are Pittsburgh, Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Denver, Seattle, and San Francisco. In two more cities, Atlanta and Cleveland, current home building costs are very close to the 1926-29 levels. The average hourly wage rate paid common labor in January, 1939, was 68 cents an hour, compared with an average of 55 cents in the 1926-29 period.

The average hourly rate paid skilled labor in the building field in January was $1.43, compared with $1.33 in the 1926-29 period. The rise in the wage rates paid common labor has almost eliminated the unskilled workman from the home building field in many localities; apprentice classes of skilled workmen are now used in operations formerly handled by common labor, at little higher hourly cost and with better productivity and quality of workmanship.

Figures submitted by Minneapolis building contractors on a five-room house to be sold for $5,000, and costing $4,700 for labor and materials, show a labor cost of $2,200, or 47 per cent, and a materials cost of $2,500, or 53 per cent. The old rule-of-thumb in the late '20's was 40 per cent for labor and 60 per cent for materials.

Higher wage rates, increased costs due to higher building standards, and social security and other tax additions are offset in a number of ways in modern home construction, the study shows. Operations are considerably more mechanized than in the late '20's. There is little hand sawing. This is almost all done by machinery at high speed.

Freight rates on some materials are reduced: Mill work, for example, is largely milled where the trees are cut, instead of the unfinished lumber being shipped to various local points and milled there. Heating plant parts come so accurately fitted that much less time is required for installation than formerly. In general today builders' profits are very narrow, and at times are at the vanishing point. Finally, present day financing costs are much lower than in the late '20's.

Net results to the home buyer of today are: A tightly insulated house—insulation was the exception rather than the rule a decade or so ago; an automatic heating system, with winter air-conditioning, for little or nothing more than the old-fashioned "shovel swinging" plant; 30-year guaranteed roof instead of a 20 or 25 year job; safety wiring in metal conduits, which costs the builder ten times as much as the old open wiring; a slightly smaller cubical content than the same money would buy in the late '20's, but actually greater usable living space and a considerably more spacious appearance, due to better planning and arrangement, and infinitely greater beauty and variety of design. Finally, purchase terms are far more liberal and interest rates far lower than ever before.

Thus the home buyer today gets considerably more for his dollar, while labor gets a larger share of that dollar, the report sums up. It again offers this reminder, however—the cost of building even a modest home is advancing at approximately $10 per month.

New Window Treatments Show Daring Effects

In a recent exhibit of fall furnishings, the displays of complete window treatments combining draperies, curtains and colorfully painted Venetian blinds, attracted a great amount of comment and attention throughout the show. Daring departures from precedents in color and style characterized the displays with such combinations as marine blue and lemon yellow; turquoise and cherry red attaining prominence and favor.

Solid Colors Popular

Walls painted in solid colors are used in the most recent plans for home decoration.

Grouped Plumbing Saves

For economy in building, all the plumbing in the house should be grouped together if possible.

Home Loans Total $797,996,000 in 1938

A total of $797,996,000 was borrowed from savings, building and loan associations in 1938, the United States Building and Loan League reports, making the year just past the second largest since before the depression. December loans by the associations surpassed that month in 1937 by 6.3 per cent, the first time during 1938 that a month had shown more activity than its parallel month of the preceding year.

Loans which provided people with money to build new houses, a conspicuous feature of the savings and loan activity during the latter months of 1938, mounted higher in December than they had been in November by 2 per cent and they were a fourth greater than December a year ago.

New Lavatory Has Unusual Features

A new lavatory, while only 13 inches square, has many features usually associated only with larger fixtures, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau. The new lavatory has a spacious 3-inch shelf providing ample space for toilet articles, a handsome chromium plated mixing type fitting, and faucets with renewable seats and comfortable handles.

Frigidaire Dealers to Meet Here

450 to Attend Area Sales Convention On Friday

More than 450 major electrical appliance dealers and executives of department and furniture stores and public utilities in Balitmore, Washington, Hagerstown and surrounding territory will attend a sales convention here February 10, under supervision of officials of Frigidaire Division, General Motors Sales Corporation, who are coming from Dayton, Ohio, it is announced by H. L. Harbison local branch manager.

This meeting will be held in the Mayflower Hotel, where the 1939 line of new Frigidaire refrigerators, electric ranges, electric water heaters and commercial refrigeration equipment will be displayed for the first time to the Frigidaire sales organization in this area.

Company plans for the coming spring and summer sales campaigns will be given by a group of approximately 13 Frigidaire representatives from the Dayton plant, who have been working since November on the program to be presented.

Mr. Harbison will preside as chairman of the convention.

Splash Blocks Urged

Do not let downspouts or leaders empty directly on the ground; provide splash blocks at least 3 feet long under the spouts to carry the water away from the house.

Dahlia Futurity Medal to Be Offered Again

Capital Is Given First Place in Last Year's Shows by Official

By Katherine B. Pozer.

At the last meeting of the National Capital Dahlia Society, John L. Bishop, chairman for awards, announced that the House Beautiful Dahlia Futurity gold medal again would be among awards at this year's shows. The medal is awarded only at outstanding shows, regional in character.

In announcing the list of dahlias which will be included in this year's Futurity, J. W. Johnson, who makes the selection, gave Washington first place in last year's shows "due to the well planned layout." In its two years the Washington show has risen to this high place, and the show for the coming year promises to be of even better character. Frank L. Goetzger, chairman for the show the last two years, again will head the general committee.

The House Beautiful Futurity, comprises a class of the newest varieties. The entries, which must be of dahlias from the Futurity list consist of six blossoms, which may be of a simple variety or each bloom a different variety.

Local growers will have the opportunity of entering three Futurity competitions, as both the Woodridge Garden Club and the Takoma Horticultural Society have a Futurity with a silver medal award and the Baltimore Dahlia Show has a gold medal. The Baltimore Show was said by Johnson to have been the strongest in the country "competitively" last year.

The four classifications in the Futurity are: first exhibition; second those with futures as cut flowers and for garden adornment, not necessarily large but good growers and bloomers and beautiful in appearance; third pom-poms, miniatures and singles and, fourth, foreign varieties.

The 1939 Futurity list includes, in class one, Jean Johnson, San Francisco, Frank Otis, Everybody's Favorite, Glamour, Virginia Shipley, Rita Wells, Aurora, Model 999, Your Lucky Star, Roulette, Dai Wong, Hillside Sunset, Bim Bam, Uniwell Empress and Cracker Jack.

In class two are Louis Walcher, Marietta, Miss Santa Monica, Hillside Gold, Red Letter Day, Apple Blossom, Ohio Rose and Margie Parreda; class 3, Julia S., Baby Snooks, Dianne Roseanne, Cynthia, Betty Malone, Little Prince, Snow White, Thrill, Doc and Pink Lass; the foreign varieties, Mrs. B. Amber from Australia, The Bride, Magel's Giant, Kimi Kage, Sir Arthur, from England, Don Sowton, Petit Sonne, Little Darling and Reginald.

The variety Sleepy Hollow, winner of last year's Futurity, received the largest number of points at the 26 shows which gave Futurity awards. It is a giant, incurved pink and white introduced by D. T. Morgan, jr. This variety was winner at the National Capital show, and visitors to the show will remember the six blooms of this beautiful flower which gave the award to Mr. Goetzger.

Second place last year was a tie between the dahlia, Carl Dahl, of the Hillcrest Gardens, and a variety from Australia, the Freda George. Third went to Monarch of the East, from Almy's Dahlia Gardens, and the Julian C. Bunge, from the Mad River Gardens, took fourth place. The latter had the distinction of being shown in more classes than any other variety.

Varieties in this year's lists which had interesting records at last year's shows include the Mayor Frank Otis, an informal with soft, golden-yellow and coppery shading, with good keeping qualities. This variety won six awards at the Alameda Dahlia Show and two at the California Dahlia Show, and was also a winner at Portland. It was given the silver medal of the American Dahlia Show in New York. Everybody's Favorite, a rose-pink, giant informal, decorative, was winner of the highest award at the Midwest Show at Detroit, and Glamour won the achievement medal at the Baltimore Show.

Information and advice on the newest dahlias may be had from the National Capital Dahlia Society. With its large orders from members, the purchasing committee obtains special rates on dahlias from many of the best growers in the country. The performance of the newest varieties is important to prospective purchasers, and many members of the society, through their own experiences, are qualified to give valuable information. The newest dahlias are discussed informally at monthly meetings of the dahlia society. Information about the society or its meetings may be had from the president, Dr. C. C. Clark.

Alexandria

Mrs. Atherton Macondray will be hostess at a meeting of the Garden Club of Alexandria Tuesday afternoon. Morley J. Williams will discuss the gardens at Mount Vernon.

Woodridge

The annual dinner of the Woodridge Garden Club will be held tomorrow evening at Sherwood Hall, Twenty-second street and Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Radio Garden Club

Two interesting programs will be given over Radio Station WOR this week, sponsored by the Radio Garden Club. At 1:15 p. m. tomorrow Robert E. Tapperson, seedman, will discuss "Something Old, Something New," and Friday afternoon at the same hour H. H. Hess will discuss "Watering the Garden."

National Flower and Garden Show

Opening next Sunday and lasting through the week, the Flower and Garden Show of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists will be held at Houston, Tex., at the Sam Houston Coliseum.

Natchez and Southern Shows

The Pilgrimage Garden Club of Natchez again will open 20 of that city's historic homes to the public March 4 to 19. The tour, as in the last eight years, will take two days, and is divided into four sections, a morning and afternoon being devoted to each. In the evenings there will be Confederate Balls and the singing of spirituals, and other interesting events to make a visitor's stay full of interest and to give a picture of the interesting past of Natchez.

The New Orleans Fiesta will be held March 12 to 19, and the gardens at Bellingrath will be in full bloom at the same time, as will the famed Azalea Trail of Mobile.

Design Brick Dwellings

Kirkhuff & Bagley are designers of nine two-story brick dwellings which Brown Bros. Corporation will construct at 3611-3615 Ingomar place northwest, 5234-5238 and 5244-5248 Nebraska avenue northwest. Estimated cost of the dwellings is $8,000 each.

Waverly Taylor Building

Waverly Taylor, Inc., continues its Dumbarton operation with application for permits to build four more two-story brick houses in that development. They will be located at 4632, 4636, 4640 and 4644 Reservoir road northwest and their estimated cost is $50,850. Taylor & Drayer are the architects.

Duborg Offers Studio Type Living Room

Post Display Home Is Being Shown In Aurora Hills

Living rooms of the studio type are proving popular with home buyers, and numerous developers who have provided these innovations in floor planning have met with a gratifying response from purchasers. The studio arrangement is a pleasing departure from the older and more formal styling of this important section of the home and the touch of unconventionality adds to its attractiveness.

This form of planning has been applied to the living room of the Washington Post Display Home now being shown at Twenty-sixth street south, in Aurora Hills, Va. The exhibit dwelling has been modeled along lines of the quaint and pretty manor house of Sweden. Characteristic of the family meeting place in Swedish homes, this room has been given ample space and light through generous dimensions and two large bay windows. A large corner fireplace with broad, elevated hearth completes the Scandinavian motif in the building of the room.

Built by Duborg Construction Co. and presented by the Duborg-Hallock Agency, Inc., this dwelling contains a large entrance hall, bright dining room, modern kitchen, screened living porch and bedroom with complete bath on the first floor. Upstairs are three wide and comfortable bedrooms a tiled bath and five commodious closets. A recreation room with service bar, maid's room, bath and two-car garage are in the substructure.

Located in a delightful wooded section, only three blocks away form a business and shopping section and close to the Army-Navy Country Club, this air-conditioned display house may be inspected by crossing Memorial Bridge to Arlington Ridge road, then south, or left, two miles to Twenty-third street, and left one block.

Food Exposition To Open Feb. 13

Featuring an attractive entertainment program, the Eighth Annual United Food Store Exposition will be held February 13 to 18, inclusive, in the Packard Building, Twenty-fourth street northwest, north of M. All space for the show has been sold and 50 exhibitors are assured it was announced by exposition directors. The first session will get underway at 8 p. m., February 13, and programs have been arranged for each afternoon and night of the week through Saturday.

Honor guests for opening night will be Alvin Hall, director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; Judge Robert E. Mattingly and Isaac Gans, A. B. C. Board member. Meyer Sody, president of United Food Stores, heads the exposition committee. Other members are Morris Engel, vice president; David Abraham, treasurer; Samuel Goldstein, manager, and David Hornstein, general counsel.

Shrubs Screen Porch; End Goldfish Feeling

The old idea of the front porch open to the street so that our outdoor life was visible to all who passed is disappearing. If you still have the front porch and want to keep it, plant a hedge of some quick-growing shrub and put gate posts and a gate at the entrance to the path. In a short time, when the hedge grows up, you will lose that goldfish feeling.

National Association of Real Estate Boards, was a visitor here last week on his way back from Dallas, Tex., where he relinquished his executive duties to E. L. Ostendorf, Cleveland, new president, at the annual meeting of organization.

Harry Grant Atkinson, Chicago, director of activities of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, will arrive here this week to prepare for the national conference on property management to be held at Wardman Park Hotel, February 13-16.

Announcement was made last week that Walker & Dunlop, Inc., has been named an approved mortgage for the Federal Housing Administration.

New Furniture Orders Exceed $35,000,000

Buyers at International Home Furnishings Show Expect Sales Boom

By Lynn Wood.

Chicago.—New furniture presentations at the International Homefurnishings Market here reflected the "tempo of the times" in that no drastic departure from previous furniture trends was seen. Furniture displays showed two parallel developments—a furtherance of the American modern show during the last two years and a continuance of the traditional furniture for the more conservative buyer.

Although the modern furniture at the show has not been radically changed, it continues to feature a softening of lines for the more gracious living which is a keynote of today's home furnishings. Warmer finishes, too, are being shown—radically departing from the harsh bleaches which marked the renaissance of "modern" furniture two years ago. Darker than the suntans and suntones of the last market are the new finishes which have eliminated even the "orange" cast, and have become mellowed to a light cocoa shade.

In contrast, period furniture was seen not only in the approved dark mahogany, but in even greater numbers of light finishes than have been recently shown. The amber shades vie with the dark mahogany for interest in traditional furniture, in so doing retaining the lines of the ancient masters, yet adding a modern touch in the new finishes.

The "ensemble" idea in home furnishings is stronger than ever, with living room, dining room and bedroom furniture correlated for the American woman who is becoming increasingly style conscious and wishes to have her room in perfect harmony, but who is unable to have an interior decorator. Many exhibitors showed complete rooms and series of rooms to be sold as ensembles with colors matched and details worked out to present a well-styled room or house.

There is a tendency to subdue color and further simplify lines. Color was of prime importance at the show, with greater emphasis placed on the "off" colors. Mauve shades, with a decided purplish cast, vied with blue-greens for importance. Deep burgundies, deep blues, a rose that is almost a rust, and interesting off-whites were important.

Topping all previous highs for attendance and buying, the Homefurnishings Market chalked up a record registration of 10,383 buyers as jubilant exhibitors tallied orders whose value was estimated to exceed $35,000,000. Volume of sales for the total market, was 42 per cent greater than in January, 1938.

Buying in the market was of a character to indicate a sound and important business comeback in the homefurnishings field. Throughout the Nation there is a genuine consumer demand for homefurnishings, marking the close, this year, of a ten-year cycle since the Nation's homes were last refurnished in the boom days of 1929. Consequently retailers atending the markets bought as they have never bought in ten years to rebuild stocks.

Further optimism is founded on the immediate prospect of new millions to be spent by the consumer for the outfitting of newly built homes which is seen in the gathering force of the current upswing in home construction over the country. National figures show residential building to be up 60 per cent over a year ago, with construction running over $100,000,000 a month for the last quarter of 1938.

Modern Bathroom Varied in Style

In making plans for a bathroom, either in modernization or in new construction, one of the first points to consider is the style and location of the bathtub. Once bathtubs were as alike as peas in a pod. Today there are more than 20 different models and styles.

Unlike some home equipment, plumping fixtures are not subject to seasonal style changes. New models are an outcome of constant study in relation to the problems of sanitation, safety, practicability, and the needs and desires of the public.

Design trends are toward a lower fixture. Some of the newer models measure only 16 inches from the floor to the rim, thus making it easy to step in and out.

Iron Faucets Melted But Enamel Is Unhurt

Cleanliness, durability and lasting beauty are characteristics of plumbing fixtures made of enameled cast iron. Porcelain plumbing fixtures have gone through fires hot enough to melt the handles of the faucets but the finish of the fixtures was unharmed.

Home Building Costs Low Now, Statistics Show

Construction Materials Still Priced Far Below 'Normal' Year of 1926

Construction materials, representing approximately 55 per cent of a structure's final cost, are still priced far below costs for the so-called "normal" year of 1926, and last year's figures showed a decline of 6 per cent from the preceding year's costs, a study of United States Department of Labor statistics reveals.

Making public these figures here, the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association, national organization of the country's 23,000 lumber and building material dealers, pointed to advantages for prospective home owners planning to build on today's market.

Cost index figures, compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for 1938 and just made public, show that building materials as a group stood at 90.3 for the year, on the basis of the 1926 average of 100. This is a decline of approximately 6 per cent from the 1937 average cost figure.

Significance of this decline on the total cost of a dwelling was stressed by Frank Carnahan, national secretary of the dealers' organization. In the field of low-cost housing, in which the association anticipates greatest activity during 1939, such a drop represents an important factor, he asserted.

"In the face of propaganda intimating that building costs are on the rise," Mr. Carnahan declared, "these Federal statistics speak for themselves. They show that the cost of building materials is still far below normal and that the trend over the past two years has been downward."

One of the largest drops in material costs, as shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics compilations, was registered by lumber, index figures of which stood at 90.9 for 1938, as compared with 99 for the preceding year.

N. Y. Crowded Century Ago, Study Reveals

City's Rapid Growth Produced Many Complex Problems

Complaint of congestion in New York City was heard in 1801, although most of the 22½ square miles which composed the Island of Manhattan were yet to be improved, Sidney I. Pomerantz says in a study issued by the Columbia University Press.

The phenomenal growth of New York during the last years of the eighteenth century, Mr. Pomerantz finds, produced numerous complex municipal problems concerning such matters as sufficient housing, both for public and private purposes, adequate measures for fire prevention and fire-fighting, the building and maintenance of streets and roads, of docks, slips and wharves, and public and private land improvements.

Good ferry service, competent provision for keeping the city clean, the creation of a water supply system for the health and convenience of the populace, the development of esthetic interest in the appearance of the metropolis by the introduction of parks, the erection of statuary, the planting of trees and the initiation of a new city plan, were other pressing projects of the period.

1,000 Buildings Burned

"The devasting fire of 1776 had destroyed all the houses in the area between Broad and Whitehall streets, and along both sides of Broadway as far as Rector street, as well as most of the dwellings in the section between Broadway and the North River as far as Barclay street," Mr. Pomerantz explains, in part. "Approximately 1,000 buildings were ruined by this conflagration, and another blaze two years later took further toll of property.

"During the British occupation of the city no effort has been made to rebuild the gutted districts, and squatters took advantage of the general neglect to erect canvas shelters amidst the ruined structures, especially in the burnt section between Broad and Whitehall streets, which became known as 'Canvas Town.'

"To reconstruct the entire area became a major problem of the post-war era. Other building needs were concerned with renovations and repairs for the neglected private dwellings and public structures, and there was hardly one in the city that was not in this category as a result of the war-time occupation. With one-fourth of New York's prewar dwelling capacity in ruins and many other houses in need of urgent repair before they could be rendered habitable, a serious shortage of living quarters developed, which made a program of rehabilitation most imperative.

Repair War Ravages

"Outside of enforcing certain building restrictions, the corporation played no part in the construction of private homes. That phase of the rebuilding process was left solely to individual initiative, which lost no time in beginning to repair the ravages of war. Within a few years most of the shacks in the burnt district were demolished to make way first for cheap frame structures. After 1790 these in turn were displaced by 'elegant brick houses.'

"On the eve of the Revolution there were about 4,000 houses in the city. Three years after the British evacuation the number was approximately 3,240. But by 1790 there were from 4,500 to 5,000 dwellings, an indication of the rapidity with which homes were being erected. In the last decade of the century, building went on at an accelerated pace. By 1794, when some 850 new houses were built, it is estimated that there were 8,900 houses in New York. Despite this activity in construction, living quarters failed to keep up with the increasing demand, and rents rose rapidly. By 1800, building operations were as numerous as in previous years, though there appears to have been a wide choice of accomodations, as there was much moving about on May 1, the city's traditional moving day.

City Expanded Rapidly

Not only had there been much reconstruction, but new dwellings were erected in the outlying portions of the community. On the eve of the Resolution, the city had been built up to about the present Roosevelt street in the area east of Broadway and a little beyond Chambers street, west of Broadway. By 1789, the eastern section of close settlement was extended northward so that it reached Bayards lane—Bullock, present Broome street, and the western area was advanced a block beyond Chambers street to Reade street.

From the Battery to the northern limits was about a mile and a half on the east and a mile on the west. By 1796 a further advance northward took place, the outer limits of settlement this time being about 1 2-3 miles from the southern tip of the island. Both east and west of Broadway the city's outskirts touched what is now Houston street.

"By the end of the century the town's built-up area did not extend beyond the line already reached a few years before, inasmuch as to the south of it there were large vacant spaces still to be built upon and much swampy ground, especially in the neighborhood of the East River, and Lispenard's meadows on the west. Despite this circumstance and the added consideration that most of the 22½ square miles that composed the Island of Manhattan were yet to be improved, complaint was already heard in 1801 that the city was becoming a congested place in which to live.

"The new homes that were erected in the closing years of the eighteenth century did not suffer by comparison with those of prewar construction. To the Walton and DePeyster mansions of the Colonial era were added equally prominent structures, one of the most pretentious being the Macomb house, residence of President Washington in 1790. The dwellings of the wealthy were common in the Bowling Green district, and on Broadway, Whitehall, Beaver, Broad, Water, Pearl, Vesey and Barclay streets. Moreover, northward beyond the city limits stately country houses dotted the landscape.

"Gov. John Drayton, of South Carolina, who visited New York in June, 1793, wrote: 'The rides in the neighborhood of the city are for miles beautiful. Every elevation of ground, presenting some handsome country seat. With what pleasure, have I often viewed them.' Many of these villas had been built before the war; others were of more recent construction.

Entries Rising In Build Your Home Contest

One Shows Residence Of 20,000 Cubic Feet To Cost Only $9,000

Entries are increasing in the "Build Your Own Home Contest" of the Permanesque Homes Village, Inc., arousing interest in it large residential development near Alexandria, Va., called Beverley Hills. Beautiful and interesting plans are being evolved from the many sketches and ideas submitted by competitors.

One drawing published recently shows a handsome residence of 20,000 cubic feet content, which, it is announced, would not exceed $9.000 in cost, if erected in the Beverley Hills community. Under rules of the competition, those seeking the prizes, amounting to $2,500, must be definite home buying propects and select lots in Beverley Hills. Plans they submit must call for homes of not more than 20,000 cubic feet content.

Sketches and designs must also provide for dwellings conforming to structural and architectural standards already estabished in the development. Entries mnst be on file at the office of the developing corporation by March 15, and houses to be built from designs entered must be completed by July 1. Contestants are permitted to select their own architects or builders, if they desire, or utilize facilities of the Permanesque organization.

To reach Beverley Hills, drive over Memorial Bridge to Arlington Memorial, take the road to left continue past the Little Tea House on South Arlington Ridge road, or Mount Vernon avenue, and preceed along the ridge to Russell road and turn right. Entrance to the project is only a few hundred feet beyond.

Four Homes Planned

Oliver B. Cassell will build for David Cooper four two-story brick residences at 211-213 and 217-219 Forty-seventh street northeast, costing $16,000. T. W. Valentine designed them.

Deadline Is Set On Scholarships

March 1 is the closing date announced by the American Institute of Architects for receiving proposals of candidates for the 1939 Edward Langley scholarships in architecture. Proposal forms may be obtained from the secretary of the Institute at 1741 New York avenue.

Any architect, architectural draftsman, graduate student, or teacher of architecture in the United States or Canada is eligible for an award for advanced study, travel or research. The grants are limited to ten annually, with no stipend exceeding $1,500.

A candidate who is an architect or architectural draftsman may be proposed by any architect living in the same county, while teachers and graduate students of architecture may be proposed as candidates by the faculty of any architectural school in the United States that is a member of the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture, or the faculty of any architectural school in Canada with a standing satisfactory to the secretary of the institute.

Black Floors Effective

In well-lighted rooms floors painted black may be used with good effect. If a tinge of the principal color of the room is incorporated in the black paint, a greater degree of color harmony between the floor and the furnishings results.

OLD WORLD CHARM

The Washington Post Display Home

Inspired by a fine Swedish Manor House and created with painstaking care, this smart new home combines the tasteful decoration and modern appointments a discriminating taste appreciates. There is an old world atmosphere about it—yet it is modern to the Nth degree. Its host of unusual features give it a character seldom achieved.

A broad entrance hall leads to a great studio living room, with a beautiful view of the Capital framed in its broad bank of windows; an authentic Swedish fireplace is in one corner; the vaulted ceiling is paneled in knotty pine. Also on the first floor are a beautiful dining room with bay window, a bedroom or library with bath and an ultra-modern kitchen.

Upstairs are two fine master bedrooms, a child's room and gleaming tiled bath. A recreation room with service bar, maid's room and bath and two-car garage occupy the basement. Built with finest materials throughout—air conditioned by Gar Wood—a home that is really different awaits your inspection today.

Decorators Have Smart Ideas for Walls, Slip-Covered, Striped and Floralled

Painted Drapes Aid Room With White Walls

Alcoves Widely Used; Bamboo Also Gives Decorative Effect

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

It's much easier to settle down with ivory walls and let the house go at that. But it will look taken-for-granted, don't forget that. So before giving up to mediocrity, consider some of the dramatic ideas that the leading decorators suggest for making the walls assume design responsibility in smart rooms. Remember that about two-thirds of the area of the room is wall space . . . no wonder it will make or break the room, however nice the other furnishings may be.

Here are alluring wall ideas put forth in exhibits seen recently. And oh, lady, lady, don't admit your age by being shocked at the unexpected. You don't have to take up every novelty that comes along, but 'twill keep your taste fresh and gay to consider the novelties and be open-minded to the dramatics of decorating.

Slip covered walls—Why didn't anybody think of that before? A plain painted room can achieve seasonal distinction if you hang a slip cover from the moulding to cover a single wall. I saw the idea tried out fetchingly with a striped fabric slip covering the fireplace wall in a room with the other walls in a dark tone.

With Striped Walls

Flowered ceilings—Don't gasp till you've thought it over. A flowered wall paper (without an up and down motif) is very gay on the ceiling of a room where side walls are striped. Cut-outs of the floral design can be grouped at the corners to straggle down the walls a bit.

Painted draperies—And to frame the fireplace, what's more! Very smart, too, you'll say if you had seen it done in a room with white walls festooned with a drapery of amethyst color painted over the fireplace.

Glass brick panels—Set on either side of a fireplace are stunning if there are luxuriant plants to silhouette against them. These plants grow in bulit-in troughs in the window sill and through the glass brick comes plenty of sunlight to keep them hardy.

Alternating florals—For a stair well that presents such broad expanses of wall to cope with, here's a bright idea—have alternating strips of plain and floral paper both with backgrounds of the same tone. They can be joined by a narrow border or not. Select a floral that won't leave an unfinished motif at the seam of course.

To Match

Walls and chintz to match—One of my pet foibles. You can buy charming French wall paper with chintz of the same design, and a more delightful idea for certain rooms I can't imagine. To give your maple a new lease on life . . . to dramatize French provincial things . . . to refresh colonial mahogany. Most of the patterns are sprigs or smallish bouquets with an old stuffy sort of charm about them.

Collections on the walls—There's a vogue now for using wall brackets to exhibit special treasures. Brackets in gilt or white plaster, in mahogany or maple or glass all can make genial patterns on the right wall. To hold small ivories, porcelains, terra cottas, bronzes, or flowers—they adapt themselves genially to decorative use.

Alcoves—actual or optical—are being used widely to vary wall interest. An alcove is a fine way to get extra closet or shelf space out of your corners without spoiling the looks of the wall. The alcove that results may be mirrored or papered or painted. It may be a recess for bed, dressing table or desk, or it may be a frame for a fine painting or piece of sculpture. An effect of an alcove where there really isn't one can often be achieved by wallpaper borders or panels, or by clever use of moldings.

Bamboo walls—The effect of a bamboo wall can be achieved with a new wood weave wall covering simulating bamboo. It is attached to the wall at the molding so that you can take it with you when you move from one home to another. Quite a neat little trick, say I. It would be a smart idea to use on just one wall, for instance, to vary the monotony of plain painted surfaces.

Mural walls—it is quite the thing to let pastel murals dominate the fireplace wall these days. In two of the most dramatic new rooms I've seen, murals have presided with the fireplace opening finished with molding and the mantel shelf omitted.

Parquet walls—Very exciting indeed is a dining room in which the parquet floor is continued on up to cover one wall. The remaining three walls of the room are a brilliant green.

Wall Paper in Alcoves Gives Pleasing Contrast

Here wall paper is used to line the alcoves of this bedroom and achieve a pleasant contrast with the plain walls. The colorings in this bedroom are French blue and lemon yellow

Goodrich Official Here for Parleys

Estimating the manufacture of approximately 50,000,000 tires in 1939 and anticipating a sales gain of at least 15 per cent in the tire industry this year, R. McTammany, assistant general sales manager of the B. F. Goodrich Co., Akron, Ohio, is in Washington for sales conferences.

McTAMMANY

"The tire industry experienced a substantial increase in replacement tire sales during the last quarter of 1938 and it is believed that this will be sustained well into 1939," McTammany said, in part. "If estimates of 3,500,000 new cars and trucks during 1939 prove well founded, 5,000,000 more original equipment tires will be required this year than last. Farm vehicles and implements of all types are now using rubber tires and more than half of the agricultural tractors built during 1938 were turned out with rubber tires instead of steel. Even the plow, one of the oldest of farming tools, may now be equipped with specially designed pneumatic tires, and others are available for 40 types of agricultural implements and all wheeled farm tractors.

"The average American passenger car tire bill will be about $17 during 1939, or less than 8 per cent of the car owner's expenditures for tires 30 years ago, when most cars required at least five new tires yearly and average tire mileage was only about 3,000 miles. Tire improvement has been due to many factors, including the acrievements of research." Other Goodrich Co. officials here are N. A. Glantz, field sales promotion manager, tire division, and A. R. Bowlzer, assistant sales promotion manager.

Chicken Loaf Firm Moves to New Home

Wharton Chicken Loaf Co. reports its removal to a new address at 1409 Fourteenth street northwest, where an improved product is announced. New equipment has been installed. Improved methods of cooking and personal supervision by Mr. Wharton, founder and originator of the product, give promise to an even greater demand for the popular dish. The same standards of delivery and service are announced.

Paint Accomplishes Modernization Wonders

Paint accomplishes modernization wonders and at small expense. Furniture that has lost its freshness may be rejuvenated by a coat or two of paint harmonizing with the color of the room.

Freshly varnished floors and newly painted or enameled woodwork reduce cleaning worries.

Dodge Truck Starts Round Trip to Peru

14,000-Mile Jaunt to Bring Inca Collection For New York Fair

Officially started by Mayor La Guardia, of New York, on a 14,000-mile "good will trip" to South America, with Lima, Peru, as the terminus, a Dodge truck passed through Washington last week and was met here by Federal officials and representatives of the Peruvian government.

Announcement of the trip first came from the office of J. D. Burke, director of Dodge truck sales, who explained that the tour, the first of its kind into South America, includes a visit to the historic Inca country in the Andes Mountains. Through arrangements by Manuel B. Llosa, commissioner general of Peru to the New York World's Fair, the truck will return with a collection of Inca relics and artifacts loaned by the Peruvian government to Dodge for exhibition at the fair.

En route to Peru the truck will stop in key cities to receive letters from mayors to the Lord Mayor of Lima. These messages will express cordiality between two nations. Another purpose of the trip is to emphasize the importance of completing a Pan American highway to join the Americas in commercial transportation. A connecting link making possible a highway for commercial transport would open new trade markets for the industries of North and South America.

Peru long has had a progressive program in respect to highway building. The tour to Peru is a tribute to the highway plan of President Benavides, whose government is spending one-sixth of its budget on highway improvements and will call attention to the miles of good highway in Peru. So enthusiastically was the tour approved in Peru the government passed a special law loaning Dodge certain valuable Inca relics. One museum piece to be taken to New York for exhibition is a mannikin of great value, insured for $50,000. Driver of the vehicle is Edson A. Smith, a champion truck driver from Detroit. Smith won his title in a recent contest.

LAST CHANCE TO SEE THIS NEW MODEL APARTMENT HOME

Exhibit Home—3908 South 7th St.—Arlington, Va.
American Homes Corporation presents this perfected model Apartment Home for inspection of home buyers and housing experts ONLY until 10 P. M. this Sunday night. The prior model was described by its owner to a prominent FHA representative as "A $110 A MONTH CONNECTICUT AVENUE APARTMENT AT ONE-FOURTH THE COST" and it is the last word on the housing problem. Built of concrete masonry, steel and glass, it encloses a large apartment modern in detail and equipment, with automatic hot water and oil heat, a large unfinished recreation room and full basement, lot 50x100 or more, landscaped. This is the large improved model originated by us. Do not be fooled by imitators building small or artificial stone front copies of our old experimental models: despite notice we will protect our legal rights in all of our designs, whether perfected or experimental. Now you can own your own apartment at half or a fourth of your rent for a comparable apartment, with Winter-Summer air conditioning. WHY WASTE $18,000 IN RENT IN 25 YEARS (AT $60 PER MONTH)? February contracts accepted at $5,190; ONLY $519 DOWN and 89c PER DAY PAYS OFF FHA MORTGAGE AND ALL INTEREST. After March 1st, price is to be $5,290 due to increased cost of materials, etc. A few blocks away is the beautiful modern Colonial Home, same price and terms, at 1732 South Pollard St. Lots in best sections included.

Few 'Nine-Day Wonders' Win Place in Sun of Hollywood's Celluloid Heaven

If you're in the headlines, filmland has a job for you. Of course, the job never lasts long, but while it does last you'll get plenty of action. Sonja Henie, left, who got into pictures because she was news in skating events, is one of the few to survive. She turned out to be a good little actress, too. A current ballyhoo queen who shows promise of lasting more than one picture is Princess Baba of Sarawak, circle, who was a hit in her first film. She arrived in Hollywood because her father is the only white rajah, because he disinherited her when she married the European middleweight wrestling champion, Bob Gregory, and because the facts were frequently mentioned in the newspapers.

Louise Hovick, above, better known as Gypsy Rose Lee, was swept into films on a wave of publicity some months ago but, after four films, returned to the stage. Douglas Corrigan, left, is playing himself in the forthcoming "Flying Irishman." The studio will get a lot of publicity by using him instead of an actor but the chances are that he won't stay in Hollywood long.

Studios Use Celebrities For Color, Then Forget

Princess Baba and Sonja Henie Prove Exceptions, Winning Movie Careers Through Acting Ability

By Lucie Neville.

Hollywood.

There are some actors in Hollywood's celluloid circus who never play more than one performance, but for that brief time they get more attention than the stars.

These sideshow players aren't freaks, but they are good for freak publicity, a sort of ballyhoo bait to get the fans' attention before a film is released. These 9-day wonders are recruits from everywhere —hoboes and Back Bay socialites, strip-teasers and wrestlers, jitterbug teams and hog-callers, beauty contest winners and sneezing experts.

Often there isn't any reason for their being in a picture, except for the publicity. Naturally, RKO will get more ballyhoo for its "Flying Irishman" by hiring Douglas Corrigan, instead of a movie actor, to play Douglas Corrigan. But it was just as legitimate by Movietown standards for Paramount to give bit roles to California's handsomest taxi driver and Hollywood's prettiest waitress, winners of studio-conducted contests which had reaped wide publicity.

It is unfortunate if any of these non-acting players hope for a movie career. When Hollywood crooks a finger and says, "C'mere a minute," it means just that. Usually hired to play themselves in a few scenes, they are finished with the picture.

A few of them do make the grade, though. There is a current nine-day wonder girl at Universal who shows promise of lasting for more than one picture.

Case Is Exception

Her case was typical at first. The W. C. Fields picture, "You Can't Cheat an Honest Man," had a bit role—a non-vibrating Litttle Egypt in veils and harem trousers—to dress up Edgar Bergen's and Charlie McCarthy's circus act. Any prettty stock girl would have done, but she would have been useless for press ballyhoo.

A publicity-natural was found in Princess Baba of Sarawak, who had movie aspirations but no dramatic experience except curtsying before the King when she was presented at Britain's court. British papers already had made headline whoopteedoo over her when she married Bob Gregory, middleweight wrestling champion of Europe. The wedding was news because the bride was the youngest daughter of Sir Charles Vyner Brooke, only white rajah in the world and hereditary ruler of Borneo's Sarawak. It was like a shilling novel —royalty defiantly marrying a commoner and being theatrically disinherited.

When the young couple came to America, the wrestler's tour was publicized, not on his record, but on his wife's rank and the family feud The tour ended in Los Angeles and, since the couple was earning its own way, it was logical even for royalty to get a job.

The movie publicity tie-up also was logical, not to say a gift from heaven, and Princess Baba of Sarawak became Princess Baba of Universal. It was played up for all it was worth, the title used even on the picture's side-show banners; the studio's publicity department got to practicing salaams in private.

But the sultry-looking blonde photographed unexpectedly well and more lines were added to the bit role until she was included in every scene with Ventriloquist Bergen and his boy. Now Universal is talking about a contract which would take her out of the freak-exploitation class. Whether she will be successful as "Valerie Brooke, actress," can't be predicted but the studio has agreed that the princess stuff will be dropped and she may use her own name in future pictures.

Henie Won Stardom

Only one nine-day wonder girl has achieved stardom — Sonja Henie. Hired for her skating, she had a heavy figure and a heavier accent, but no acting experience or even ambitions. But she was a showman, and between her ability and her studio's careful planning of pictures that would justify continued skating roles, she is a box-office topper.

In Miss Henie's case, movie publicity works both ways because her tours, managed independently of her studio, are ballyhooed in advance by her films. Naturally, 20th-Fox was happy for Miss Henie to include in her road show the "Alice in Wonderland" number that is in her current picture.

Other sports champions have been numerous, but few have been even moderately successful. Bobby Jones made a series of golf shorts and Babe Ruth, at the height of his career, was the hero of "The Babe Comes Home." Jack Dempsey even had his nose remodeled for the screen, but he turned out to be something less than a Barrymore.

Slapsie Maxie Rosenbloom is the only fighter to develop dramatic ability. After his role in "The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse," Warner Brothers gave him a contract; his studio actually thinks that he is such a good actor that it now pays little attention to his ring career, though it still is active and successful

He came to Hollywood in 1933, after losing his light-heavyweight championship, to make a quickie called "Mr. Broadway." His friendly St. Bernard face began to be in demand for ring-type roles and he made a hit in "Nothing Sacred" with his telephone conversation scene.

It was with mutual best wishes that Louise Hovick and 20th-Fox parted company a few months ago, after a year's trial. As strip-teaser Gypsy Rose Lee, she was the darling of the runway fans and earning a very respectable salary. When Park Avenue decided she was Art, movie agents in New York persuaded her to come out and play in something provocatively called "You Can't Have Everything."

She made four more pictures before both sides called it quits. The studio's explanation was that it never had a suitable picture to display Miss Hovick's—er, ability.

Stokowski Lent Dignity

In a long jump from the burlesque stage, Hollywood lands world-famous musicians for ballyhoo bait. Leopold Stokowski, playing himself in "100 Men and a Girl," lent just the right kind of dignified publicity suitable to a Deanna Durbin picture. He breaks the one-minute rule, however, because he is working now on a score to accompany a Disney film, but he will appear briefly in it, then only in silhouette. Jascha Heifetz also will be seen and heard in a Goldwyn picture.

Sometimes this brief glory goes to their heads. It did to Jeff Davis' baldish one after only three days of acting. Brought here as technical adviser and publicity stooge for Paramount's "Arkansas Traveler," the King of American Hoboes was paid a fat salary. Pictures showed him instructing Bob Burns in the art of making mulligan stew and he was interviewed on how it felt to live in luxury after years of hoboing.

His actual acting was one line and no emoting was needed for his brief scene of carrying a saw. But Davis evidently valued his time highly, because he sued the studio for $50,000 for the three days of acting. His claim was settled out of court for a few dollars.

Stars Now Employ Business Managers To Protect Them

Hollywood (AP).—Stars and their money are soon parted—but that was once upon a time.

Now most of the stars have business managers or counselors who protect them, as far as possible, from the 101 ways in which they can shovel earnings down the sink to schemers.

Recently a big parade of Hollywood stars marched into Federal offices to be questioned in the case of William Buckner and William Gillespie, who are accused in New York State of attempted sale of fraudulent Philippine railroad bonds. Questioning revealed no stellar buyers, left questioners mainly with Loretta Young's tribute to Buckner, "He's a lovely boy!"

George Burns, Jack Benny and other movie and radio stars have been embarrassed by their alleged connection with the Chapereau smuggling charges—but time was when, in a similar case, most of Hollywood would have been equally embarrassed. For Hollywood ever has been a paradise for the get-rich-quicker, a happy hunting ground for the sharper. There's always a lot of money lying around loose—owned by people who don't know how to spend it, coveted by people who do.

That's why the bona fide business manager, a trusted agent for the star's spending and saving, has come into importance in Hollywood.

Hollywood's first business manager, who still handles movie incomes exclusively, is J. S. Rex Cole, whose clients include Warner Baxter, Tay Garnett, Henry King, Constance Bennett, Robert Montgomery, Grace Moore, and two dozen others.

Many picture people, brilliant in film work, might make excellent business men, Cole thinks, if they did not choose—wisely, he adds—to devote all their energies to creative work. He cites Robert Montgomery, Ernst Lubitsch, Warner Baxter and several others to back his opinion.

But actors usually haven't time for business. Many are emotional, subject to impulsive purchases or sales. Many haven't the slightest idea what to do with money when Hollywood suddenly showers them with it.

Perhaps the most exclusive club in the country, including even the celebrated Somerset Club, of Boston, and the various little hunting and fishing associations which men of vast means are so fond of organizing, is, of all things, a woman's tong, and its headquarters is, naturally, in Manhattan. It isn't really organized, but its entrance requirements are probably the stiffest of any group in the world, since membership is based upon one distinguished achievement alone; the possession of a chinchilla coat. Besides chinchilla, the other costly properties of the world, star rubies and cabochon emeralds, shooting moors in Scotland, imported motorcars, yachts, Palm Beach villas, private cars, de luxe mistresses and even racings tables are as peanuts to pecans. Harper's Bazaar, for its February issue, wanted to run up a layout of chinchilla coats and wraps and was only able to find photographs of nine (eight of them Morocco shots by Zerbe, by the way) in existence. The photographed members of the Chinchilla Club are Mrs. Jay O'Brien, Mrs. Frank C. Henderson, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. James W. Corrigan, Mrs. George Washington Kavanaugh, Mrs Allen Lehman, Lupe Velez, Mrs. William Randolph Hearst and Mrs. Stephen Sanford. Others with chinchillas of note are Lily Pons, Mary Pickford, Mrs. Eric Loder, Mme. Francis Alda and Mrs. Corliss Sullivan (formerly Cleveland's legendary Lucy McKinney of Corrigan-McKinney fame) and that is just about all the really notable chinchilla owners in the United States that the leading furriers of Fifth avenue could think of. One reason why the Chinchilla Club has no waiting list, and probably never will have, is that Imperial Peruvian chinchillas, the finest of all fur bearers, are now practically extinct and that a live chinchilla in captivity where he may be bred is worth up to $1,700 on the hoof. The pelts themselves sometimes sell as high as $450 each, and when one considers that for Miss Pons' wrap 110 skins are required (and Miss Pons is on the tiny side at that), it is possible to understand just how snooty this club of fur-bearing ladies of fashion is. Mrs. Sullivan's coat, to be sure, was bought almost 30 years ago and for something less than $40,000 at the time, so that in the light of mounting prices, until only one or two coats a year now appear on the market, it can be regarded as something of an investment. Most chinchillas now come from Bolivia, the Argentine and Peru, where they live in almost inaccessible mountain fastnesses, and, since only the backs of the tiny animals are used, it takes a considerable number to make up any sort wrap. The members of the Chinchilla Club can, obviously, turn up their noses even at the members of the Royal Yacht Squadron.

Nothing could more humorously illustrate the various viewpoints on life in general of Boston and New York than a comparison of the doings at a meeting in each metropolis of the local Wine and Food Society. Co-ordinately organized for essentially the same purposes, the two chapters, while quite separate, are presumably dedicated to two good causes, the pleasure and social foregathering of their members and the promotion of sound eating and reasonable drinking, particularly in the field of wine rather than spirits, among the general public. Although recruited from precisely the same social strata in the two communities and dedicated to the same theses, nothing could be more different than two of the dinners of these clubs. The New York society, of which Richardson Wright is the distinguished president and Crosby Gaige the prime mover, foregathers in full-dress conclave at the hotel restaurant selected for the occasion, seldom dines off fewer than six rather elaborate courses, often ten, and is awash with reporters, photographers and society scribes who will ultimately retail the fine gustatory doings to a by-no-means indifferent public. In fact, the publicity attendant thereto is almost as essential to one of the New York dinners as is the sole, souffle and cognac. The Boston society, on the other hand, gets together in an atmosphere of almost clandestine secrecy, the gentlemen wear nothing more formal than dinner jackets, and four courses, beautifully served but with a suppression of panache that would seem positively bourgeousie to one of Manhattan's knee-breeched and gold-chained major domos, is about the limit. Reporters are kept rigidly at bay and a photographer on the premises would cause far more terror and consternation than a bomb tossed through the window. Your New Yorker of celebrity and circumstance may be photographed 20 times an evening and has learned to assume a camera-proof facade any time after 8 o'clock, but Bostonians still regard news photography as socially tantamount to hiding in a patrol wagon. The first of Boston's wine and food dinners

New York.

So many letters come to me from readers who plan or hope to be in New York during the current year, that I feel I must answer them in a column.

I try to answer each of these inquirers personally. Yet, the questions asked are so similar in most cases, that I think it may be possible to write one column that will answer thousands of questioners at once.

The typical letter says, in substance: "I have always wanted to visit New York. I hope to do it during the World's Fair. I have a limited amount of money to spend. Where should I go; what should I see, for the money and time at my disposal?"

Not easy to answer in a general way. Please do not feel that I have any objection to answering specific questions of correspondents. I am happy to do it, to the extent of my time and ability. I believe, however, that I may be able to answer a good many questions in advance, thus:

The two classes of people you will come into closest contact with in New York are policemen and taxi drivers. Unless you know your transportation lines well, it is better to take a taxi for almost all trips of reasonable length within the city.

Do not take a taxi to the fair. Not unless you have lots of money.

I was out at the fair the other day, attending something that was to have a sausage testing, a wiener roast, or something like that. It turned out to be a speaking contest, a statistics marathon and a starvation experiment. Five of us hired a taxi after the first hour of speaking and starving. When I left the cab at Fifty-fifth street and Fifth avenue we had not checked too closely on the meter, but we were giving the late stayer $1 apiece for our ride. The clock probably said about $4 for the distance between the fair and the heart of Manhattan. That is expensive transportation, and you can do much better by subway.

It is extremely important for the total stranger in New York to realize this: Your most dependable friend is the uniformed policeman. There is not one chance in 1,000,000 that he will let you down. When in doubt about anything, consult a uniformed policeman. If you hide nothing from him, tell him that you read in this column that he would be your friend, the busiest policeman in New York will take all the time required to advise you, guide and direct you.

Clergymen in New York are extremely busy persons, no matter what their denomination or where their church. They are generally difficult to reach. So don't count too much upon talking it over with the preacher of the church which represents the same religious faith you have been living with in your home town. In most cases you will get no farther than the young lady who is secretary or receptionist in the business office of the church. The ministers are not inhuman. They are simply too busy to see strangers. The well-trained secretaries are apt to be a bit cold and impersonal, from the point of view of the person who comes from a smaller city. Some of those girls can bring your temperature down to zero in two sentences.

Still, if there is serious difficulty, you can get at the clergyman. I strongly recommend that Travelers Aid. You will find uniformed representatives of this organization in the rail terminals, or you can reach them by telephone. They know everything. They will positively protect the stranger from racketeers if he can be relied upon to follow directions. The Travelers Aid can get in touch with the clergyman of your denomination if that is necessary.

Please remember this about taxi drivers in New York. Each one of them works under direct supervision of the police department. In case of any difference with a driver, call a policeman and tell him the whole story, calmly and without paying any attention to what the driver says.

If you think the driver is giving you the merry-go-round, merely say to him, "Drive me to the nearest police station." He is required to do exactly that, and if he's wrong, he stands to lose his license.

There is a meter in every taxi, and this meter is inspected regularly. There is small chance that it isn't working properly. It must be lighted, and the driver must not throw the lever in such a way as to make the face of the meter blank. He must allow you to see and read the meter at all times, until you have paid your bill.

In the cab, within plain sight of the rider, there are two cards. One carries the driver's photograph and description, name and number. Strangers should make a practice of jotting down name and number of driver on each taxi ride.

Sport Ward, architect, smokes a pipe with a devil-may care expression that many of the more worldly about-towners strive vainly to imitate. Grosvenor Atterbury, another architect, smokes an old-fashioned cob pipe with a meditative air. Bob Brinkerhoff, cartoonist, gets an expression of amiable benevolence into his pipe-smoking. Harry Maule, book editor, gives the pipe a scholarly twist, while Rex Beach, author, cocks his head at a rakish angle and puffs the pipe-smoke out gustily, as though he were having a great adventure. Montfort Armory, artist and antiquarian, gets an immense lift out of his pipe. He loves to clean it, stroke its bowl affectionately. J. P. Morgan smokes a deeply stained meerschaum which gives him a fine excuse for delaying answers to questions. He likes to take several final puffs before answering. In the meantime, Thomas Lamont, his partner, may speak up, and Mr. Morgan can go right on smoking.

was, to be sure, open to the press, but a rude cameraman actually photographed a well known banker with a cocktail glass in his hand and the banker was forced to leave town for the remainder of the season. In New York the most conservative bankers are grateful if they get photographed lying on the floor wrapped in the tablecloth with a bottle in the mouth.

That wonderful Tyrolean hat being worn so jauntily by Skipper Williams, dean of ship-news reporters and the glory of the New York waterfront, is a hat with a history. To begin with, nobody, while the memory of man runneth, has ever seen the Skipper in anything but the cast-iron derby which came to be as closely associated with his person as his wing collar, black string tie and elephant scarfpin. To imagine him without his pot hat was unthinkable, but one day a few weeks ago, while boarding the Queen Mary, a gust of wind whisked it off his head and into the waters of the lower bay. "Full speed astern!" screamed the Skipper. "All hands on deck regardless of occupation!" but the hat was irretrievably gone, and the next day the green Tyrolean number with a feather a foot long made its appearance, with the Skipper looking like nothing so much as Prince Danillo in "The Merry Widow." The Barge Office to a man was graveled. Nothing like it had ever been seen before, let alone on the majestic head of the most dignified of all ship-news men. It seems that the hat was a gift of Mme. Jeritza, in whose chalet near Salzburg the Skipper and Mrs. Williams passed their vacation last summer, and she had made him promise to wear it for her. The Skipper had never had the nerve to wear it before his pot hat blew away, and now the boys at the Barge Office are getting up a petition to Mme. Jeritza to please send him a new cast-iron derby, as he doesn't look natural without it. Tyrolean hats may be all right for bell ringers, college boys and Alpine climbers, they argue, but not for the Skipper.

AROUND THE BOULEVARDS: Frank Chapman is back from Florida with an enormous hamper of those fabled rock crabs, which he is sending around to friends . . . Bob Davis writes from Mexico City: "Come on in, the tequila is fine!" . . . If that Chicago penny-liner imagines he coined something when he called the inmates of the cafes "saloon society" he might well look at the columns of Manhattan's own Maury Paul, who began using it five years ago . . . Selmer Fougner's "Dining Out in New York," which will appear in the bookstalls shortly, bids fair to be the best gourmet's guide since George Ross's "Tips on Tables," which, while excellent, is now out of date. . . . How the Baron Fougner manages to get in and out of so many saloons, ordinaries, class joint, deadfalls, bistros, eateries and cook shops without ever having to go to Battle Creek is one of the seven wonders of New York. . . . The monocled and literary Achmed Abdullah caused consternation at the Radio Franks Club last week by demanding an order of spinach soup with a poached egg in it. . . Said it was a well known combination in the Orient. . . . The internal architectural convulsions that have been going on in the lobby of the Gotham have at last subsided and the hotel has opened its new gold cocktail lounge.

Home Is Where the Art Is

By WEARE HOLBROOK

One of our larger art galleries recently gave over its entire wall space to an exhibition of paintings by doctors. Not iodine or mercurochrome paintings, but oils and water colors. The subjects included the usual still-life, landscape and figure studies that are found in group exhibitions, and the technique in general was conservative but sound.

Judging by the number of items on display, the medical profession has been going in for art in a serious way, and the idea is not as bizarre as it may seem. The surgeon knows anatomy, and his touch is precise and delicate.

But the doctors are not the only ones who are turning to art as an avocation. Bankers, lawyers and famous statesmen now ply the brush and crayon in their spare time as enthusiastically as they used to play golf and read detective stories. They explain, with a deprecatory smirk, that they do it merely for relaxation, but secretly they are very proud of their self-made masterpieces. Men of affairs who used to be content with magazine covers and insurance-company calendars now prefer to unroll their own.

There is, in fact, a raging epidemic of artistry all over the country. I can remember the time when painting was regarded as little more than a ladylike accomplishment, like playing the harp. A girl took lessons on the theory that if she failed to catch a husband, art and music would be a solace to her during the long years of spinsterhood.

But today almost everyone I know is dabbling among the pigments. They paint with no sordid thought of gain, but simply for the joy of self-expression. Their amateur standing is secure and unimpeachable. And since they cannot sell their work, and storage space is limited, they must resort to giving it to their friends.

This brings up a problem of etiquette that might puzzle even Mrs. Post. Let us say that you drop in to call on an acquaintance and, like a bolt from the cobalt blue, he turns out to be an artist. With ill-concealed pride, he displays his latest canvas. It is a picture of a muddy-looking peasant woman holding a lopsided jug. She has one of those flat, triangular faces peculiar to the primitives; her hair is greenish, and her banana-like fingers suggest an advanced case of arthritis.

"What do you think of it?" your friend inquires, trying to sound casual. And there you are, standing with reluctant feet where both horns of the dilemma meet. If you are honest and say, "I think it's lousy," you cut him to the quick. If you are polite and say, "I think it's lovely," the chances are eight to five that he will give it to you; then you will have to put it up on your wall and keep it there against the time when its donor visits you. What to do?

Somewhat the same situation exists in literature. Every once in a while an aspiring poet corners me and reads me one of his metrical masterpieces. In most instances it is not bad enough to be funny or good enough to be breathtaking. I haven't sufficient knowledge of prosody to criticize it technically. Besides, listening to verse being read aloud always causes a creeping paralysis of my critical faculties; I just get sleepy. And so, when the reading is over, I simply register vague but earnest enthusiasm by saying, "Boy, I think you've got something there!"

But you can't say that with any conviction to an amateur artist. Though he may have something, he doesn't keep it long; he gives it to you. And though he may announce with Bohemian insouciance that he doesn't care what becomes of a picture after he's finished painting it, you can be sure that the next time he calls on you he'll give your home a quick once-over to see whether you've parked his little masterpiece in a good light.

Personally, I consider nothing lovelier than a blank wall, especially in a city apartment where space is at a premium; but in this opinion I seem to be practically alone. There used to be a vacant area above the mantelpiece in our front room. Many an evening I would sit gazing at this blessed bit of blankness and thinking no thoughts. All around it were things—bric-a-brac, furniture, pictures, lamps, curtains and other distractions. But above the mantelpiece there was nothing at all; it was like a nice thick slice of Nirvana.

However, this unoccupied territory seemed to arouse the predatory instincts of all my artistic friends. They lusted after it, as Hitler after Czechoslovakia. "You really need something up there," one would say. "A large landscape with plenty of soft grays and greens to give depth and distance to the room. Now, I happen to have the very thing for you——" "What this room lacks is warmth and color," another would inform me. "Say, a little portrait of a bullfighter with a red cape. Come to think of it, I just finished something of that kind last week——"

In self-defense I announced that I was already at work on a picture to fill the space over the mantel. I was very secretive about it, telling them nothing except that it was to be an oil painting. I selected oil as my imaginary medium because it requires more time than pastel or water color; it sometimes takes an artist a year to finish an oil painting, and I hoped that in the meantime my friends would forget about my legendary artistic career and grow accustomed to the hiatus above the hearth.

But no; they continued to ask how my painting was getting along; and my secrecy only stimulated their curiosity. "I'm afraid you can't fool them much longer." Phoebe said finally. "Yesterday Miss Maulsby asked me if she couldn't take just a teensy-weensy peek into your studio. I couldn't tell her that you had no studio; so I said that you were very temperamental and went into absolute tantrums if I even knocked on the door—and she said, 'Ah, these geniuses!' But you'll have to get busy and produce something, or people will begin to be suspicious."

"All right," I agreed recklessly, "bring me my brush and palette!"

Phoebe did better than that. She brought me everything an artist could possibly need, except inspiration — brushes, paints, turpentine, linseed oil, a smooth white canvas, a man-sized easel and, best of all, a smock. It was a gray linen smock that went on over the head and billowed from neck to knees in ample folds.

Setting my canvas on the easel in a good north light I began my painting in a business-like manner, starting at the upper left-hand corner and working down. It was to be a landscape at sunrise. I planned to make the sky blue at the top, introduce some yellow near the horizon where the sun was coming up, then combine yellow and blue for the green of the countryside, and put a fat red barn in the foreground. Grant Wood stuff, if you know what I mean.

The first day I got almost all the sky in place, which was very encouraging. The second day while putting in the sunrise I made the mistake of holding my palette upside down, with the result that my smock looked like an oversized order of omelet aux fines herbes.

Then when I got ready to paint the barn, I found the top of my tube of cadmium red stuck as tight as a Pullman window; it was necessary to perform a Caesarean operation to get it open, and more of the paint went on me than on the canvas.

And finally, just as I was establishing the subtle line of demarcation between barn and background, our pet dachshund bumped against the hind leg of the easel, and the entire canvas toppled over into my lap.

If I had been a real artist, no doubt I should have broken down and cried at this point. But instead I compared, critically, the canvas and the front of my smock, and decided that there was more paint on the latter. So I framed the smock. It hangs over the mantelpiece today—a colorful example of impressionism entitled "Work in Progress," with apologies to James Joyce.

After all, an artist shouldn't be wrapped up in his work all the time. Look what happened to Van Gogh.

The Once Over

The Hot Dog Now Putting On The Dog

By H. I. Phillips

They held a "preview" of hot dogs and hamburgers at the New York's World Fair the other day, and if that isn't something new in swank, you get three more guesses. It was held for the benefit of the press and some selected guests, the idea being to show to what extent the frankfurter and the hamburger sandwich can be glorified if one really is determined enough.

The event was really a formal showing of the Hot Dog of Tomorrow and its proper sphere in the World of Tomorrow.

If you had any idea that the frankfurter and roll, together with the hamburger sandwich, were common foodstuffs capable of no style or swank, you should have seen what the World's Fair is doing to 'em.

The preview included a showing of what was called "Frank Swanks," or 57 ways to prepare a frankfurter. One concoction was the "Frankfurter Quail," and consisted of a dog served with cheese and bacon. Then there was the Hamburger World's Fair, the meat wrapped around a pickled onion and dipped into egg batter and corn flakes and fried brown.

It would not be thought unusual if a society debutante posed with an all-hot in her hand at the big coming-out party and some of our leading dowagers can't get through the day without a dog with lots of mustard

If that isn't giving glamour to a hamburger and onion, what is?

The fried, boiled, broiled, steamed and fricasseed frankfurter were also shown and they even had new models in rolls. Nothing looked like its old self except the mustard.

When a World Fair goes to all this trouble to publicize hot dogs and hamburgers you get some idea of the place of prominence they have come to occupy in our national life. The hot dog has just about become Edible No. 1, with the "catmeat and onion" a close second.

The hot dog really got its real start at baseball parks, where it almost replaced the peanut, but it was not until the New Deal came into power that it found real recognition in a big way. President Roosevelt will go down into history as the man who gave the hot dog its first boost. He revealed himself as a genuine hot-dog addict. Stories were sent out about his appetite for the frankfurter and roll and the newsreels even had pictures of him tackling them.

Mrs. Roosevelt came out with a few kind words for them, too, and in no time the country was frankfurter conscious.

Now people who would never get near a lowly "dog" in the old days, when class distinctions were class distinctions, go for them avidly. It would not be thought unusual if a society debutante posed with an all-hot in her hand at the big formal coming-out party and some of our leading dowagers can't get through the day without a dog with lots of mustard.

It's the same way with hamburgers. Of course hamburgers were always a little more upper-class than dogs. The hamburger has always been a victim of manhandling, however, and you could count on the fingers of one hand the cooks who knew how to turn out a hamburger that didn't taste like something left over from the cat's breakfast. The general inclination is to think that a hamburger is just a wad of fifth-grade meat, pounded into a disc and flung into a frying pan for about 3 minutes, the onion being applied to hide the fact that the meat tastes awful.

A hamburger can be made, however, so that it is a highly palatable, not to say delicious, article of food. But it takes, first of all, something besides dog meat. It requires some good grade steak, well chopped and with no tough ends tossed in. It should be grilled if it is to be at its best, and under no circumstances should it be fried in lard or substitutes. If you must fry it, use butter.

If the World's Fair reveals to the world the right way to cook a hamburger it will have contributed much to the happiness and joy of the human race. And it looks as though it would so do.

There is no telling how much indigestion in America is due to old-fashioned hamburger sandwiches, but it is probably terrific. At the hot-dog and hamburger preview, hamburgers were really made from meat fit to eat and some attention was even paid to the toast.

If anything has been neglected in American life it is toast. And the World's Fair may do something about that too.

Grover Whalen promises that toast will look like toast and, what is more, that it will taste like toast. More power to him.

It appears that there will be 90 hot-dog and hamburger stands at the Fair and it has been figured out that for every ten paid admissions to a World's Fair three and a half sandwiches are sold. Believe it or not, there are people who spend time figuring such things out.

All in all it will be quite a hot-dog and hamburger carnival. It makes us feel really interested in the New York World's Fair for the first time.

Grover, one frankfurter and one hamburg, please! And don't spare the swank!

Dale Carnegie Says—

I received a letter from a father last winter which I answered in one of my radio broadcasts, but it is so poignant and the subject so important that I'm going to repeat it here:

"I have one of the finest boys in the world. He's a Boy Scout, he's goodlooking and I'm proud of him. Yet I am losing his love. When he disobeys his mother or does things wrong, I fly into a tantrum and make life miserable for both of us. My business keeps me away from home much of the time, and while I am away, I make all sorts of good resolutions. Then I come home, find he has done something wrong again and I nag and bully and shout. This keeps up from Saturday night until Monday morning, and has gone on until I have lost 15 years of my boy's life."

Aren't you sorry, from the bottom of your heart, for a father with a problem like that? And don't you think the solution lies within himself? I felt that the best way for me to help him was to quote from a book by Earl Looker, "The White House Gang." Here is the story:

Young Quentin Roosevelt was a member of this White House Gang. One day the boys conceived the brilliant and agonizing feat of focussing mirrors to flash sunlight through the windows of the Army and Navy Building. A protest was sent to the President.

Did Theodore Roosevelt rush out and yell: "What in the name of common sense are you doing? Do I have to drop the affairs of the Nation to attend to you? Come upstairs this minute, and you just wait until I get through with you!" No! He called his personal aide, Capt. Archie Butt, scribbled out a message and sent Butt downstairs with full instructions.

Capt. Butt found the gang and said: "Boys, they are going to signal something from the top of the War Building . . ."

The War Building! Signals! What boy could resist that? A moment later a figure appeared on the roof, and with flags signalled:

You, under the trees, all of you. Attack on this building must immediately stop. Clerks cannot work. Government business interrupted. Report without delay to me, for you-know-what. Theodore Roosevelt.

How could you help worshipping and respecting a father who had the imagination to treat you like that? The boys knew they were in for it. But their pride had been spared. They hadn't been humilated.

And when they filed crestfallen into the President's study, he still kept up the game. With an absolutely straight face, he pretended to conduct a court martial and pronounced them guilty.

Let me get back to this letter from the man who wants to regain the love of his son. If he had written that letter to Theodore Roosevelt, what do you think Roosevelt would have advised him?

I once asked Helen Menken, famous stage and radio star, for a word to pass on to you who read this column.

"Tell them," she said, "not to let discouragement get them down; tell them they must be able to take it."

"Have you had to take it?" I asked.

"Don't you think so? Listen to this. A few years ago I needed a job badly, but neither on Broadway nor in Hollywood could I get anything. My sister had a dress shop on Madison avenue; she said I might help her. Well, a job was a job. And it seemed no use trying to go on with acting.

"One day a customer came in and ordered several dresses. She also wanted an undergarment which my sister didn't stock. She turned to me:

"'Go to that shop on the corner,' she said, 'and get me one. Hurry back.'

"The audacity of it! Understand, I had been successful on the stage for a long time.

"My sister looked up. 'Yes, run along, Helen,' she said.

"I rushed out, humiliated. I would never go back! To have come to this—an errand girl! Then I happened to glance up. There before me in a shop window was a five-word placard: 'So you can't take it.'

"I caught my breath. All of a sudden I faced what it would mean if I couldn't take it. Failure was certain. If I did it, maybe—just maybe—success would come again. With renewed hope, I went on and performed the errand. Then I again started the rounds, pounding pavements between the offices of casting directors. I got hold of the manuscript of "The Old Maid" and after some time and much effort got it produced. It was a tremendous success."

Helen Menken learned to "take it." Can you? If you can't, no one will want you in business and no one will want to be around you socially.

You will get off to a good start at any meeting if you feel you are a welcome member there. In most instances, somewhere along the line, this is or has been up to you.

Tex O'Rourke, famous after-dinner speaker, gives us two rules for making ourselves welcome:

1. On meeting a former acquaintance, never ask whether your name is remembered unless you are positive that it will be.

2. Never begin a telephone conversation by asking, "Do you know who this is?" They are much abused queries, as we well know.

Tex says he naturally can remember only a small percentage of the people he has met as Ranger, circus performer, newspaper man, sports promoter and after-dinner speaker, and that he is almost embarrassed by those "Do you remember me?" greetings. So is everyone else. Tex told me that he usually greets a casual acquaintance with some such remark as "Howdy, stranger . . . I'm Tex O'Rourke. I met you over at the Flying-Donut."

Musical Stars Take Flier In Field of Tragic Drama

"Of Mice and Men" Brings Versatile Cast To National Theater Tomorrow Night; Maurice Evans Outlines His Plans

By Nelson B. Bell

EVEN TO ITS VETERAN STUDENTS and most faithful adherents, the theater is a constant source of surprise. When I say "surprise" I do not mean "bewilderment" or "chagrin." I mean merely that there always seem available to those responsible for the purveyance of the better things of the parent theater talents that have been unsuspected and avenues of approach that have been untrod. It adds to the excitement of playgoing.

A conspicuous case in point is to be found in "Of Mice and Men," to be presented for the first time in Washington in the National Theater tomorrow night. When John Steinbeck was called upon to dramatize his own novel, he executed a superior work of craftsmanship. His play was hailed by the Broadway critics as one of the finest things of its season. Grim, relentless and tragic, yes, but a bit of dramaturgy so sagaciously conceived and so skillfully wrought that its stature among contemporary plays was assured.

Mr. Steinbeck and his producers relied upon no great "names" of the theater to insure the success of their excursion into the fertile field of adventure opened to them by the lives of the itinerant ranch hands of the West. Their play succeeded under the single force of its dramatic integrity. The principal roles in the original company, if a faulty memory, by some miracle, is in working order, were played by Crawford Broderick, son of that pungently penetrating comedienne of stage and screen, Helen Broderick, and Wallace Ford, also one who has contributed much to the eminence of the celluloids. So that is where the surprise comes in.

When "Of Mice and Men" is seen on the National stage tomorrow night, its foremost roles will be played by two distinguished figures of the theater whose names never before have been associated with this type of theatrical enterprise. One is Guy Robertson; the other Claire Luce. Neither is unknown to Washington audiences. Neither is either of them known to local theatergoers in vehicles other than those relying primarily upon music for their appeal. Mr. Robertson and Miss Luce, as dramatic stars, will be a new experience.

Adventure in a New Field

THIS IS NOT at all to say that we mistrust their talents in a field which, one dares to say, must be as new to them as it will be to those who observe them across the footlights. It is merely to go on record that we anticipate another of the thrills that spring eternally from the theater's versatility.

It might be noted at this point that Mr. Robertson's emergence from the highly colored roles he has played upon the musical stage into the more stark precincts of tragic drama has not been too sudden. To be sure, Mr. Robertson sang and played the role of Johann Strauss in that fabulous production of "The Great Waltz" something like 1,200 consecutive times, but always in the back of his mind was the notion that dramatic roles really were his metier. He seems to have had little difficulty in convincing Producer Sam H. Harris that there was a substantial foundation for his confidence; or George S. Kaufman, the director of "Of Mice and Men," either, for that matter. For there he is.

Mr. Robertson, it may be said, comes by his histrionic ability honestly. His mother was a star of the theater and his father a director. The only thing that seems to have impeded him as a leading exponent of the more serious forms of drama is the possession of too fine a voice to be ignored.

There are vague implications of a ranch in Colorado, where Mr. Robertson became acquainted with the sort of "bindle-stiffs" he is called upon to impersonate in "Of Mice and Men" and there are further suggestions that physically he is completely equipped for the role. These are merely floating about. It seems that he drinks gallons of milk a day, smokes moderately, savors a cocktail when he feels like it, stands 5 feet 10½ inches tall and weighs 170 pounds. If anyone happens to be concerned, he is reported to have azure blue eyes. He also is said to bear a striking resemblance to James Cagney, to which, knowing them both, I am totally unable to subscribe.

Mr. Robertson's first ambition was to become an engineer, but the Great War came about and he found himself in the aviation corps, instead. When that unmeasurable holocaust was over, he developed a yearning for the theater which was appeased by a professional debut in "Head Over Heels," in 1919. He still is an ardent advocate of the airlines, flying at every opportunity, smokes any kind of cigaret offered him and has a passion for football.

There seems to be no definite reason why that sort of man should be confined to the saccharine romanticisms of musical comedy and operetta.

The Blonde Miss Luce Becomes Actress

THE BLONDE and enchanting Miss Luce, I believe, is not experiencing her first adventure in serious drama in the principal feminine role of "Of Mice and Men," although her chief reputation may be said to lie in an earlier field of musical endeavor, with which the late Florenz Ziegfeld had something of a hand.

Miss Luce's major contribution to her current vehicle is reputed to be an uncanny ability to "play dead." As the blonde manhunter in the powerful Steinbeck play, Miss Luce is choked to death by the giant ranch hand, Lennie. For more than 10 minutes, so one hears, she lies in full view of the audience without a muscular twitch or sign of breathing. This in itself is a bit of an accomplishment, without regard to the exercise of the seductive wiles that may have led to the choking.

The trio of principals in the National's new offering is completed by Lester Damon. Mr. Damon is possessed of a happy facility in the matter of impersonating unlovely characters who entirely belie his own natural inclinations. An educated gentleman and graduate of Brown University, Mr. Damon was born in Providence—thus sharing eminence with George M. Cohan, foremost gentleman of the American theater—where his family was, and is, one of the most aristocratic to be found in the State of Rhode Island.

After finishing college, Mr. Damon visited relatives in England and, surrendering to that inevitable urge toward the theater, finally found himself engaged for a year of "bits" and minor roles at Old Vic's, in London. From Old Vic's practically anything in the theater is possible. So he went on from there. It was he who stepped into the role of "Baby Face" Martin in "Dead End," when Joe Downey relinquished the part to accept Hollywood's golden offers. Mr. Damon, therefore, is a close friend of those incorrigible hoodlums, the "Dead End Kids," which is all I can think of, at the moment, that I have against him!

Maurice Evans Takes Typewriter in Hand

DESPITE THE FACT that Mr. Richard Watts, jr., my remote colleague on the New York Herald-Tribune, deals with some comprehensiveness and finality on the matter of Mr. Evans' Falstaff in "Henry IV," Part One, I still feel impelled to reproduce herewith the letter I received from Maurice Evans only a few days ago—under date of January 26, to be exact.

Dear Nelson Bell: So many people have written from all over the country asking for information about my activities that I feel a

Broadway Is On Qui Vive For New Hits

February Holds Rich Promise of Plays to Swell Robust Season

By Herbert Drake

New York, Feb. 4.

If the month of December was more than unkind to the theater, developing no new hits at all, the month of January came to the rescue with at least two of those heavenly events and gave birth to five successes besides on Broadway.

There seem to be 24 shows current, and none of those are definite hits, in a slightly generous application of the term, and of the rest, most are comfortable successes, making the general picture of business a cheerful one. The month of January, with its 12 plays, brought the total produced so far to 65. February promises nine and hints at two more than that, as follows:

The Theater Guild will throw out the first play Friday night with an English adaptation of Stefan Zweig's notion of how the story of "Jeremiah" should be told in dramatic terms.

Two Shrinking Violets

Saturday night two hitherto shy theater workers will blossom out as producers with an intimate musical show called "One for the Money." They are Stanley Gilky and Gertrude Guthrie McClintic and Katharine Cornell. Their initial producing venture is by Nancy Hamilton and Morgan Lewis and will have Miss Hamilton in a prominent acting part.

The 7th has been set aside for "I Must Love Someone," a history of the Floradora Sextette by Leyla, Georgie and Battling Jack Kirkland.

The 8th is claimed by George Abbott for a character comedy he likes called "Mrs. O'Brien Entertains." He will install it in the Lyceum Theater with a cast including Margaret Mullen, Harry Shannon, Marie Brown, James C. Lane, Walter Kinselle and Katherine Meskill.

On the 9th Dwight Deere Wiman will present his second musical of the season, "Stars in Your Eyes," at the Majestic Theater. It has a book by J. P. McEvoy, lyrics by Dorothy Fields and music by Arthur Schwartz.

Miss Larrimore Returns

The possible opening for the week is "What Every Woman Wants," a number by Saxon Kling and Esther Forbes, which the Shuberts are now exercising on the road.

The week of the 13th holds one date and one promise. Herman Shumlin will do a Lillian Hellman play, "The Little Foxes," on the 15th at the National Theater with the celebrated Tallulah Bankhead in the role of a member of the Southern aristocracy.

The promise for the week of the 13th if "Off to Buffalo," a farce comedy about the accidental return of vaudeville by Max Liebman and Allen Boretz. Vinton Freedley and Albert Lewis will offer it at the Longacre Theater.

The week of the 20th will bring "Miss Swan Expects," a comedy by Sam and Bella Spewack to the Bijou Theater.

The two plays still unmentioned are the two possibilities. One, "My Dear Children," will bring John Barrymore back to the footlights, accompanied by Elaine Barrie.

SCREEN AND STAGE STARS OF THE WEEK
At top, Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen and Douglas Fairbanks, jr., in the stellar roles in "Gunga Din," now on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater. Above, Claire Luce, cast in the principal feminine role in John Steinbeck's play of "Of Mice and Men," opening in the National Theater tomorrow night—an artist's impression

BOOK DEPARTMENT: Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the retired Attorney General, will write a series of articles about her experiences in Washington . . . Mrs. Cummings, who has been the Capital's wittiest lady, will start with: "If you think it's tough getting into the Cabinet, try getting out."

Sealskin Coats Not So Costly As Single Seal

Slicker, Hollywood Star, Earns High Salary and Wallows in Luxury

By Melrose Gower

Hollywood, Feb. 4.

Niggardly is not the word to describe the cost of maintaining a sealion in the movies.

We dont' mean just any old sealion. We mean Slicker, the Gable of Sealdom, the sleek and handsome dual-flippered mammal that left his placid home in the Pacific to joust successfully for cinematic honors.

The daily tariff for maintaining Slicker in a style to which he never was accustomed before he went Hollywood is, your correspondent learned this past week, terrific.

It comes to the tidy little sum of $625 per day!

Perhaps you think this is a fish story. Unfortunately for the gentleman producing Bobby Breen's current film, "Fisherman's Wharf," in which Slicker enacts a featured role, along with Leo Carrillo and Henry Armetta, it is no fish fantasy. It is the gospel truth. Also, according to the gentleman, it is well worth the cost to transfer Slicker's fine aquatic figure to celluloid.

Highest Paid Animal

Slicker's salary, highest ever paid an animal in Hollywood, is $1,000 per week. And to that his daily fresh salmon consumption of $10.75 a day, the cost of two trainers at $20 a day, rental of a tank automobile with fresh running water at $50 a day, and the surface is still only scratched.

The sealion, like other famous movie celebrities, must have a stand-in. For this, an ambitious young seal named Curley is employed at a salary of $30 a day. Curley, too, must have a trainer, which is $10 a day additional. Also, Curley must eat.

Then the matter of cost of location transportion must be added. For the film company's hegira to the real Fisherman's Wharf, in San Francisco, where most of the picture was photographed, a special railroad car with tank and circulating water, was rented from the Pullman Co. The railroad officials were funny about this item. They refused to allow Slicker to ride in the regular baggage coach unless they could disclaim responsibility for any injuries he might suffer en route.

That is not all. Your correspondent does not wish to forget the salaried attendant of the S. P. C. A. who was ever present on the set of "Fisherman's Wharf" while Slicker was emoting before the cameras.

Case of Poetic Justice

To Owner Winston there is poetic justice in Slicker's fat film earnings. For nearly four years Winston and Slicker starved it out at the California seacoast town of Monterey, patiently waiting for the day when vaudeville would stage a comeback. As time passed he had to part with his equipment and all his seals but Slicker. He and Slicker were going to fight out their personal depression together even, as Winston says, "Though I had to learn to like mackerel."

Owner Winston smiles happily today as Slicker's fame mounts higher in Hollywood.

A Few Words About Falstaff and Maurice Evans

Even among some of his admirers there has been the suspicion that Maurice Evans was a serious minded actor, given to dramatic gravity rather than to the lighter touch. It was their fear that humorous playing would find him out of his depth, indulging in displays of frolicsome pedantry that would remind one of the schoolmaster on a lark.

Fortunately for us romantics, the skeptics are sometimes confuted in this world. Now Mr. Evans has shown us his Falstaff in Miss Margaret Webster's beautifully imagined production of "Henry IV," part I, and all of the suspicions of the doubters have been handsomely put to rout.

The Maurice Evans Falstaff is not merely a satisfactory hurdling of a difficult task. It is one of the most brilliant acting achievements of the modern theater, set down in one of the finest of modern Shakespearean productions and bringing to superbly humorous life one of the great comic figures of literature.

Of Captains and Kings

Although "Henry IV" is a chronicle of captains and kings, taking its royalty with high and pariotic seriousness, it is one of the most devastating blows ever struck against the lofty dignity of divine majesty. With earnest mien, it starts out to contemplate the clan feuds of merrie England, the development of young Prince Hal from rake to ruler, the conflict in character between the impetuous Hotspur and the crafty son of Bolingbroke, and other problems of the classes born to rule. Then something happens. Into the narrative there lumbers a great, corpulent fellow, vast of stomach and imagination, by name Sir John Falstaff.

He is a lamentable person indeed, a braggart, a lecher, a lover of strong drink and dubious women, a mocker at all the bautiful traditions of chivalry and heroism, a shameless debaucher of youth.

Yet once this bawdy, lusty, broken-down old knight has arrived in the midst of the alarums and excursions, we care no longer who rules over England, nor can we regard the activities of the kings and the kingmakers as anything more than an unwelcome interruption of Sir John's latest drinking bout.

Why should this deplorable old fellow, this worthless reprobate, seem so splendid a figure that he makes such comparatively estimable gentlemen as King Henry, the Prince of Wales and Sir Henry Miller, the valiant Hotspur, but ministers to his humor? No doubt it is in great part due to the essential perversity of man, which invariably causes him to side in his heart with the reprobate as against the grave and worthy man of dignity.

But Falstaff has a place in our affections over and beyond any such general law of human behavior. We love him because there is something so warm and richly human about him, because of the great sense of the joy and gayety that should be life which wells up within him, because of his great humorous contempt for the stuffy conventions of a hpyocritical moral code.

Knights talked in fine, rounded periods, and then indulged in actions that would shame the lowly fellows that they sneered upon.

Such use of noble terms for contemptible deeds has not, heaven knows, decreased with the years, and when Sir John Falstaff, with his roaring laugh, his comic imagination and his unashamed realism, cuts through the trappings of this outmoded chivalry, this false heroism, this fake loyalty, he delights us by his destruction of fatuous myths.

Falstaff's Cowardice

Next to the problem of Hamlet's madness, I suppose there is no Shakespearean matter more thoroughly gone into than Falstaff's cowardice. Hamlet was not mad, save in so far as the subtlety of his questing intellect suggested madness to him, but, in the same degree, Falstaff was not a coward, save as his practical sense of the reality of things gave him no illusions about heroism.

He valued his life because life to him was fun and he could see no particular point in losing it. In him Shakespeare scores his greatest point against the oratorical nonsense that men live and die by. And it is not the least of Falstaff's glories that he was the W. C. Fields of his robust day.

Even though Falstaff does capture "Henry IV," the performance never becomes a one-man show. There are at least three unusually good portrayals by supporting actors: Wesley Addy's Hotspur, Edmond O'Brien's Prince Hal and Henry Edward's King Henry.

As, for Miss Webster, after her brilliant direction of this difficult work, I suspect her of being the first lady of the theater.

Hedda Hopper

On the Ingratitude of Those Who Have Waxed Fat

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 4.—"I'm going back to Broadway, or London, or Pairs, or Berlin!" I've heard that cry for 15 years, and the other day I just got fed up when a second-rate actor, who has come out here and made a fortune, and had Hollywood practically thrown in his lap, again made the threat.

Let's take a look at some of these people Hollywood has glorified and built up from nothing. We've allowed them to become dictators, choose their own stories, directors, cast and even which side of the face must be photographed—there might be a mole on the other side. You should see how still pictures are retouched so that every line of expression is removed. No candid camera shots must go out without their personal okay. No line of publicity unless they read it first.

And what do they get on Broadway? They usually stooge for some well-known stage figure in a minor part, and after four to six weeks they're are at liberty again. Then the whining, and the finagling starts all over again—how to get back to Hollywood (with dignity) and at more money then they got before.

Hollywood's here to stay, giving entertainment for the people and by the people.

And no one single individual is going to stop the cogs going around for one single, solitary moment.

Let's take our little firebrand, Lupe Velez. When she arrived from Mexico some years ao, she was a different personality. Just a fun-loving child of nature. Well, films built her up into a tremendous name—everything she did was news. Why, once she bit a horse and got a headline! She did all right until the novelty wore off. This season again she started her shenanigans in a play called "You Never Know." But the show wasn't so hot, and they wanted everyone to take a cut. Not Lupe. She'd go right back to Mexico and make pictures. When they said, "O. K., go!" she took the cut, but even that didn't save it—the show closed.

And then she opened with Billy Rose in the same old act she used in "Strike Me Pink," doing imitations of her friends, the stars. But little Billy Rose, who isn't afraid of anybody, said, "Listen, baby—the customers are tired of that. You'll have to change your routine." And so she settled down to some good hard work, and did.

Take the case of Franchot Tone, who was a swell actor in "Success Story." Well, Hollywood built him up into star billing. And his marriage with Jean Crawford didn't hurt him any. Now he's back home, playing in a melodramatic little whimsey, dealing with racketeering and motorboat life. And playing opposite him is another one of our discontented stars, Sylvia Sidney, to whom Hollywood gave almost a million dollars.

I take my hat off to Freddie March, who poured his own money into a play last winter which brought forth not only bad notices, but gave the New York critics a Roman holiday at his expense. But he cracked right back and now is making a phenomenal success in "The American Way."

Ann Harding was another whose art Hollywood was stifling. So what? She makes a very bad picture in England, does a revival of "Candida," puts it on out here and what does it do? Well—a nose dive is putting it mildly. Which reminds me

News Items and Gossip Concerning February Amusements—The Current Attractions

George Abbott Offers Another Play of Youth

'What a Life,' Coming To National, Latest Hit Of Comedy Producer

George Abbott upset a precedent in New York last summer by giving up a much needed vacation in order to direct personally the rehearsals of his touring troupe of "What a Life," the hilarious Broadway comedy which comes to the National Theater on Monday night, February 13. The play is described as a delightful associate of "Brother Rat," the Abbott laugh hit which scored such a success here last season.

"I wanted to be sure," he states, "that the road company equaled the performance of the New York company in every way, so I kept an eye on it myself. I think the results were pleasing, for the cast is just about perfect. Certainly the Broadway cast, which has been playing for two seasons at the Biltmore Theater, is no better."

Mr. Abbott is one of the few top-flight producers who direct their own shows, and this season he has inaugurated a policy of handling all road companies himself, rather than turning them over to his production staff. In addition, he requires every player to see service in the Broadway cast of a play before taking to the road.

"What a Life," a youthful comedy written by Clifford Goldsmith and dealing with the hilarious antics of a mal-adjusted high school boy, was selected by Burns Mantle as one of the ten best plays of the season. It holds no brief except for the pleasure of the audience, and New York critics have called it a high spot in the cycle of Abbott comedies, including "Three Men on a Horse," "Boy Meets Girl," and "Room Service," in addition to "Brother Rat."

The cast is headed by Eddie Bracken, who created a sensation here and in New York as Billy Randolph in "Brother Rat."

'Washington Merry-Go-Round' Continues Next Week

Throughout Leon Pearson's new play, "Washington Merry-Go-Round," there is much talk about dictators. This is inevitable, since the play is a realistic picture of contemporary life in Washington. All of the characters talk like all of the people who live here; and, since there is more or less constant discussion of dictatorships going on in Washington, there is constant reference to the subject in the play.

As in real life, there are many people in the play who voice the opinion that we already have a dictatorship in this country. But the very fact that the Civic Theater, our own local theater composed entirely of Washingtonians, is producing a play by a Washingtonian (Mr. Pearson is a newspaper correspondent) here in Washington, and that the play is about Washington, with its cast full of Representatives and other governmental people, is proof positive that there is no dictatorship in this country.

And so, certainly we have no dictatorship of the stage, because the Civic Theater will continue its production of "Washington Merry-Go-Round" through next week at the Wardman Park Theater.

general statement of my plans may be of interest at this particular season of the year. It is very flattering to know that we made so many friends in the cities which we visited with "Richard II," and I feel I owe them an explanation as to why we cannot revisit them this year with my production of "Hamlet."

"Hamlet" terminated its run on January 21 after having played a total of 98 performances. The production played to about 125,000 people and grossed approximately $250,000. This was all the more remarkable because it was predicted that not only had New York had its fill of "Hamlet" in two recent productions, but that it was impertinent to expect civilized theater-goers to forego their cocktails and their dinners in order to arrive at the theater in time for the 6:30 curtain which the performance of the full length text demands.

Even the granting of an hour's supper intermission only succeeded in eliciting wisecracks from some of the gentlemen of the press about competitive bidding for the bicarbonate concession!

The ladies and gentlemen of the public confirmed our belief in Mr. Shakespeare's complete script by virtually ignoring the one short version of the play which we performed every Saturday night. The same public which had previously complained that even the abridged text of "Hamlet" was too long, now felt it was not getting its money's worth unless we gave them "the works," at all performances. Although this involved doing what I then thought was impossible—playing two five-hour performances every Saturday—we had no option but to take a deep breath and do the public's bidding.

King Claudius, Queen Gertrude and the Prince of Denmark and their court could be seen punching the clock at the St. James Theater any Saturday about noon and at intervals during the succeeding 12 hours whipping up refreshments on electric grills in their dressing rooms.

It was always a matter for speculation as to whether I, personally, would be seen walking out of the theater at midnight or being borne therefrom on a stretcher, but fortunately, all of my exits were vertical.

Retains Important Players in Leads

The elaborate nature of the production and the peculiar conditions imposed upon it by the length of the performance puts the idea of touring "Hamlet" beyond the bounds of practicability, but it is my hope some time in the future to take a modified production on the road, and play it in repertoire with other plays.

I shall always be grateful for the experience of last year's tour for having provided me with the opportunity of experimenting and obtaining the indorsement of local audiences for my new production of Shakespeare's historical comedy "Henry IV." So encouraging were the audiences in Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis and Toronto, that we have decided to invest the play with new scenery and costumes—make certain changes of cast—and to present it on Broadway.

Miss Mady Christians, who played Queen Gertrude in "Hamlet" will play Lady Percy—wife to Hotspur. Mr. Henry Edwards, whom I brought over from England, to play King Claudius in my production of "Hamlet" will assume the title role of Henry IV. Mr. Wesley Addy, who was so well liked as Hotspur in last season's try-out, will continue in that part and the rest of the cast will be drawn from my permanent acting company.

Following "Henry IV" we may be compelled to revive "Richard II" for a few weeks in response to the insistent demands of many of our patrons; thereafter, coinciding with the commencement of the World's Fair, it is my hope to repeat performances of all three plays on a repertory basis for the benefit of visitors from out of town.

So, although we cannot get around to calling upon your city this season, we feel that a goodly number of your residents may do us the courtesy of paying us a visit on our home ground, and hope we may be able to send them away with a report of something definitely accomplished, and a promise of good things to come.

A Happy New Year to you and a hope that we may spend part of it together. Yours sincerely,

(Signed) MAURICE EVANS.

There still ought to be some way, it seems to me, to impel Mr. Evans to change his mind, insofar as a Washington engagement in "Hamlet" is concerned. But probably not.

of the time she went into hysterics when George Bernard Shaw handed her a minor criticism about her playing the part.

Ruth Chatterton is another who did a swell job as long as everything was going her way, and she was getting that $8,500 a week. But she was very upset at being offered an unpleasant part in her last picture, "Dodsworth." So she hied herself to England and we haven't heard much from her since except that I believe she's arrived in New York to do "Farewell Performance," which I understand ran one week in London with Mary Ellis, another of our discontents.

And our English cousins are not above a mild complaint here and there. I remember a couple of years ago, when I was in London, and Leslie Howard arrived back from America, after having spent months playing Romeo. He gave forth an interview saying how his art had been stifled. But their own critics over there aren't as kind as we are. Mr. Agate, one of their more courageous ones, came out without mincing matters and told the world just what he thought of Mr. Howard's Romeo, and his ingratitude. Oliver Messel, who did the costumes for that picture, sold the original sketches and got an enormous price for them. But here, our sketches belong to the studio.

But we're so afraid we might hurt the gentle darlings' feelings. So we don't say anything. In fact, we scarcely comment on the fact that but for the publicity Mr. Howard got in America he might not have been selected to play on "Pygmalion" or he might not now be receiving $7,500 a week for 12 weeks, to do Ashley in "GWTW."

Ann at Gayety

Ann Corio, who needs no introduction to Washington audiences, will be the star of the new burlesque production opening at the Gayety Theater this afternoon. On the program with the titian-haired charmer will be Mike Sachs and his partner, Alice Kennedy. Benny Moore and a large company of Gayety favorites complete the cast, supported by a beauty chorus of vivacious and talented young women.

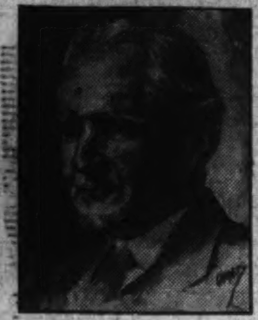
Substitute for Chanteys Lightens Dock Labors

Great Music, However, Should Never Be Made Commonplace Through Repetition And Inattentive Listening

By Ray C. B. Brown.

With mingled astonishment and amusement I read last Sunday in the New York Times a reporter's story to the effect that the labors of longshoremen and other dock workers on Pier 30 in Brooklyn are being lightened on a night-and-day schedule by a musical reproducing system installed by the Isbrandtsen-Moller Company, steamship operators. This substitute for the old-fashioned chanteys is not, according to the reporter, a device to speed up work, but a philanthropic attempt to combine entertainment with drudgery. On the principle that rhythm is a stimulant, there would seem to be a practical basis for the innovation, yet one wonders what the effect would be upon the world at large if all our activities were conditioned by music.



RAY C. B. BROWN.

"The system was installed last week," reads the account, "and on Thursday afternoon the first program came sweetly over a leased wire from the control room of Muzak Corporation, the Manhattan purveyor of pipe-line tunes to restaurants, clubs and hotels. Not that the pier force was failing to get the most out of its laborers, said H. J. Isbrandtsen, head of the concern, and his young son, Walter, also active in the company. They decided that on their pier the tasks would at least be happier with the soothing strains floating down the long reaches, amid the exotic odors of spices from the Orient, acrid leathers, rubber and other cargoes.

"Joseph D. R. Freed, vice president and general manager of Muzak Corporation, also felt that a heavy bag of coffee would assume a new aura of romance in an atmosphere charged with ebullient melodies urging the workers on. He said that the music, from recordings made specially by his company, would be planned for the particular needs of the workers who will hear it. This is all done, he said, by the concern's program department, which knows the psychological time for 'lift' music and other categories fit for a worker's wandering emotions.

"Neither Mr. Freed nor Mr. Isbrandtsen had visited the waterfront's new center of culture since the installation, but they said that reports came in regularly, and that all the stevedores, loaders, checkers and members of the pier office force were happy." There the story ends, leaving us uninformed about the different effects on work-tempo produced by an aria from grand opera and the Dead March from "Saul." Until further bulletins are issued, we will not know whether Beethoven's seventh symphony makes the men move faster than does a divertimento by Mozart.

It is highly improbable, however, that the music "piped" to the pier will be other than light and popular—the kind of music composed expressly for entertainment and for dancing. If it is not that kind, it should be, for there is a grave danger in using the wrong kind of music as a mere accompaniment to our activities either physical or mental. Music serves all our moods since it expresses all the moods of all composers who create it, and when we use music as a stimulant, we should be careful in our choice. Music of a high spiritual content cannot with impunity be used for mere entertainment, and to the extent that it is thus used, it loses its value for us.

When we speak of great music, we usually mean music which has stood the test of time by virtue of its inherent power, music which was so intensely imbued by its composer with a meaning for his fellow-men that its vitality in unimpaired, music that is an emotional record of real life. When we listen to great music, we must prepare ourselves for its reception, because great music was not meant for an idle moment. If great music is idly heard at any and all times, without mental attention, without the effort to understand its meaning, it is likely to cease being great music as far as we are concerned.

While we all recognize that music is an art, too many of us fail to realize that listening to music is also an art. Proficiency in art is reached by arduous and unremitting practice, and the only way to learn the art of listening is by practicing it. The study of so-called music appreciation too often diverts our minds from the life of music itself to its anatomy, its history and anecdotes about its composers. Music lives not while we are studying about it, but while we are listening to it with the keenest attention. The greater the music, the more effort we have to make to understand it.

'Bach Goes to Town' Proves Popular in Recording Disc

Whether It's Bach, or Just Bach-Like, It's Smart Swing; So Is the All-Star 'Blues;' Noel Coward's Sophisticated 'Stately Homes of England' Is Fun

By Jay Walz.

I don't know if it is really Bach, or just after Bach. But in a currently popular disk (Victor's 26130), Benny Goodman's men got pretty urban themselves doing a number called "Bach Goes to Town." The theme they start out on does sound like Bach, and it may be Bach. And the fugal development of that theme might be Bach, too—almost. There's just a shade of difference here between orthodox Bach and Benny—and even the shading is subtly drawn. So, even if the results are definitely swing, I cannot see how the most respectable of Bachians can fail to enjoy the fun of it. The arrangement is Alec Templeton's. The number is from his "Topsy Turvy Suite."

The old-time favorite, "Whispering," is on the other side. The Goodman gang doesn't do so much more with it than Paul Whiteman's band did about 15 years ago.

"It's a Lonely Trail" (Victor, 26131) gives Larry Clinton's orchestra a good stretch in the groove. What's more important probably is the chorus it gives Bea Wain. "I Go for That," from "St. Louis Blues," with Fred Leary singing, is on the other side.

Certain of those who've heard it say that "The Stately Homes of England" from Noel Coward's "Set to Music" is the best thing that's come along since "Mad Dogs and Englishmen." They refer, I think, to the good-humored, nipping satire on the British so abundant in each. These people, who, I think, have something, will want to know about Victor disc 26147, one side of which is devoted to several stanzas of the hit.

As on the stage, the singing is done by a quartet of sophisticated young lords, and the recorded version is identical with that which we heard recently at the National Theater. The singers are Hugh French, Ross Landon, John Gatrell and Kenneth Carten; their orchestra, His Majesty's Theater Orchestra, directed by Ben Frankel, all of London. The recording, incidentally, was made over there.

"Mad About the Boy," one of "Set to Music's" catch tunes, is on the other side of this disc. Ray Noble and his orchestra do just about everything with the song, except give you the words—there is no singing. What they do principally is to dress it up with symphonic effects until it is almost as impressive, and as irresistible, as "Night and Day."

Jitterbugs, I imagine, will be even more mad about the performances of the All-Star band on Disc 26144 (also Victor's). The numbers are "Blue Lou" and just "The Blues." The names of Benny Goodman and Tommy Dorsey stand out prominently in the list of bandsmen, but no less pleasing to throngs of admirers is the presence of a dozen of other notable swing names: Shertzer E. Miller, Rollini, Spivak, Berigan and Sonny Dunham, trumpeters; Teagarden, who aids Mastren, B. Haggart, Bob Zurke, Bauduc. If you can choose "Blue Lou" over "The Blues," or vice versa, you're a better man than I am.

Bentonelli, Monroe to Sing In Opera Here

Metropolitan Artists To Be Co-starred in 'Manon' on Feb. 16

Lucy Monroe and Joseph Bentonelli, two of the Metropolitan Opera Company's young American artists, will be co-starred in Massenet's "Manon" in Constitution Hall on Thursday evening, February 16. Smetana's "The Bartered Bride," Puccini's "La Boheme" and Wagner's "Lohengrin" will be given consecutively the evenings of February 13, 14 and 15.

Bentonelli's debut at the Metropolitan was made in January of 1936, when, without orchestral rehearsal, he substituted for the leading tenor in "Manon" and achieved a marked success. Previous to this he had sung at the Royal Opera in Rome, alternating with Beniamino Gigli. He took part in the premieres of Refice's "Cecilia" in Trieste and Smareglia's "Il Vassallo" in Rome. His outstanding American engagements have included the leading tenor roles in the first American performances of Gluck's "Iphigenie en Aulide" and Respighi's "La Fiamma."

Lucy Monroe began her career in musical comedy, from which she turned to radio work, appearing as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra in a commercial hour. She sang Musetta to Lucrezia Bori's Mimi in the performance of "La Boheme," which opened the St. Louis Municipal Opera a few years ago. She has been with the Metropolitan for one year.

In "Manon," Francis Row, Hungarian barytone recently arrived in New York, will take the role of Lescaut. Francis Barnard, young American basso, will be the Count des Grieux, and Lodovico Oilviero will be Guillot. Minor roles will be sung by two resident singers, Clelia Fioravanti and Evangeline Tully.

Artists featured in other performances include Frederick Jagel and George Rasely, tenors of the Metropolitan; Emma Redell and Margarita Salvi, sopranos of the Chicago Civic Opera, and William Fletcher Smith, barytone, and Berenice Alarie, soprano, from the Chautauqua Summer Opera.

Tickets for the four operas are available at Kitt's, 1330 G street, or at the headquarters of the organization, 1643 Connecticut avenue.

Saint John's Concert

St. John's Church announces the fourth in its series of religious concerts for the evening of February 13. The choir, under the direction of Arthur Howes, will sing Bach's Church Cantata No. 180, "Deck Thyself, My Soul, With Gladness," with Henry E. Kerr at the organ. In addition will be heard the unaccompanied motet for double chorus, "Blessing, Glory and Wisdom and Thanks," which was until recently regarded as the work of Bach, but is now attributed to Gottfried Wagner. The concert is free

Lotte Lehmann And Melchior To Sing Here

Mrs. Townsend to Present "Met" Artists In Recital Tomorrow

At her last musical morning of the season Mrs. Lawrence Townsend will present two Metropolitan Opera artists, Lotte Lehmann and Lauritz Melchior, in a joint recital tomorrow at 11 o'clock in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom. The accompanists are Pavel Ulanovski and Ignaz Strasfogel.

Mme. Lehmann's share of the program will include Schumann's "Widmung" and "Auftraege," Schubert's "Gretchen am Spinnrad" and "Der Erlkoenig," the old English song, "My Lovely Celia;" Richard Hageman's "At the Well," Hugo Wolf's "Verborgenheit," Richard Strauss' "Traum durch die Daemmerung" and Brahms' "Meine Liebe ist gruen."

Mr. Melchior will sing a group of songs in Danish, Finnish and Norwegian—"Majsang" (Lembecke), "Stille mit Hjerte" (Hannikainen), "Fehruar ved Goefen" (Alnaes) and "Hoerer du" (Sverre Jordan—and a group in German—"Mir traeumte von einem Koenigskind" (Richard Trunk), "Lenz" (Hildach), "Schmerzen" and "Traeume" (Wagner).

The two artists will also be heard together in three duets by Schumann—"Ich denke dein," "Er und Sie" and "Unter'm Fenster"—and the finale from the first act of "Die Walkeure."

Dance Troupe To Give Program

Doris Humphrey and Charles Weidman will bring their dance troupe to this city for a program on Wednesday evening, February 15, in Roosevelt High School auditorium, under the auspices of the Washington Dance Association. Miss Humphrey will offer a choreographic treatment of Bach's C minor Passacaglia. This is not an "interpretation" of the music, but an abstract dance composition based upon the patterns of the passacaglia and fugue.

Another success of the group's current season is "Race of Life," which is based on James Thurber's drawings and mimes the adventures of a man (Jose Limon), a woman (Doris Humphrey) and a child (Charles Weidman) in pursuit and attainment of "the world's illusion of bubbles." John Martin in the New York Times called it "pure nonsense," and added, "Miss Humphrey has caught the indescribable Thurber sense of comedy."

Other members on the program are "American Holiday," with music by Morris Mamorski; "Opus 51," with music by Vivian Rine, and the trilogy, "New Dance," which is being repeated here by request. Reservations for the evening can be made at the Washington Dance Association, 1742 Church street; the Community Center, Department Thirteenth and K streets; the A. A. A. and the Willard Hotel ticket bureau.

Navy Orchestra to Play

Under direction of Lieut. Charles Benter, the United States Navy Band Orchestra will give a concert Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. in the sail loft at the Navy Yard. The program is as follows: "Rhumba," from Symphony No. 2 (Harold McDonald); overture, dances and march, from "Knaz Igor" (Borodin); "Waldweben," from "Siegfried" (Wagner); "Wein, Wein und Gesang Walzer" (Strauss) and Symphony in D Minor (Franck).

Dorothea Caverli To Sing at Roosevelt

Dorothea Caverli, soprano, will be heard at the regular Sunday evening recital in the Roosevelt Hotel at 9:30 tonight. She will be accompanied by Malton Boyce in the following program:

CAVERLI

"Allerseeien," "Zueignung" and "Morgen" (Richard Strauss), "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair" and "She Never Told Her Love" (Haydn), "O Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me" (Handel), "The Soldier's Bride" and "To the Children" (Rakhmaninov), "Slumber Song" (Grechaninov), "Mah Lindy Lou," "Dreamin' Time" and "Mah L'l Bateau' (Lily Strickland).

Little Symphony Of Michigan U. to Play Here Tuesday

Sponsored by resident alumni, the Little Symphony Orchestra of the University of Michigan, composed of faculty members and graduate students, will give a concert on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Raleigh Hotel. Now in its fifth year, the organization of 16 musicians under the direction of Thor Johnson has played more than 200 converts in Midwestern and Southern cities, and this is its first appearance in the East.

The concert committee of the University of Michigan Alumni Club includes Herman Schmidt, S. P. Hayden, Robert L. Pierce and Ward H. Oehmann. They are selling tickets. The Little Symphony specializes in compositions infrequently heard, and several of them are included in Tuesday's concert. The following program will be given:

Overture to "Joseph" (Mehul), Symphony No. 12 in E major (Haydn), Adagio, Op. 3, "Les fleurs pales de souvenir" (Lekeu), Five Pieces from "For the Children" (Tansman), "Interludium in modo antico" (Glazunov), "Musical Snuff-Box" (Lyadov), "La fille aux cheveux de lin" (Debussy), "Suite in F major (Franck).

Recital Date Set

The fifth event in the concert series sponsored by the Howard University School of Music will be a recital by Charlotte Wallace Murray, contralto, on Tuesday evening, February 14, in Rankin Memorial Chapel. A former resident of Washington, Mrs. Murray has given many successful recitals in various cities.

Dr. Kindler Introduces A Neglected Overture

Lalo Work, He Believes, Should Not Be Overlooked While Acclaim Goes to the "Big Name" Composers; However, Beethoven Is Also Listed for Thursday

With Rosa Ponselle as soloist, the National Symphony Orchestra will give a concert on Thursday evening in Constitution Hall. The program consists of the overture to Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys," Beethoven's eighth symphony; Borodin's "On the Steppes of Central Asia," "Balakirev's Oriental fantasy, "Islamey," and two operatic arias by Miss Ponselle: "Divinites du Styx" from Gluck's "Alceste" and Marietta's Lied from Korngold's "Die tote Stadt." The following comments on the program were written by the orchestra's conductor.

By Dr. Hans Kindler.

Overture, "Le Roi d'Ys"............................Lalo

Music, more than any other art, has been influenced by "big names" and nineteenth and twentieth century publicity. We all are likely to shout "Brahms, Wagner, Strauss, Stravinsky" as we would use the names of any well-advertised article. This matters little as long as it does not blind us to the merits of of maybe less great but often very fine and occasionally exquisite creators.

Among these latter belongs Lalo. His output was small, but of great distinction and of perfect workmanship. His best known work is probably the "Symphonie Espagnole" for violin and orchestra. But his Concerto in F for the same instrument, the cello concerto, the ballet "Namouna," some of his chamber music and the opera "Le Roi d'Ys," of which we are playing the overture today, are certainly equally worthy of the renown which they have won in Europe but not in America.

It will be my endeavor to remain as catholic in the selection of my programs as my conviction permits and to play, besides the acknowledged masters, constantly the best works of the lesser known and often wrongfully "shelved" composers of smaller but sometimes even more finely tempered and moving talent.

The overture of today is somber in character and of definitely symphonic grandeur, with strongly contrasting lyrical episodes such as, at first, the clarinet solo, then fanfare-like passages, followed by the splendidly somber main theme of the Allegro and, later, the beautiful, tender love song (in solo cello). The entire opera is based on an old Breton legend, somewhat in the nature of Wagner's characters, but the music itself is typically meridional in its warm-blooded mellowness and dramatic intensity.

It is useless for me to say anything about Miss Ponselle. She is world-famous and known to be one of the "stars" of the Metropolitan Opera. Her choice of works for this concert is diversified. In the first half she will remain in the classic frame, singing "Divinites du Styx," from the opera "Alceste," by Gluck. In the second half she will sing a number of contrasting songs, among them Marietta's Lied, from "The Dead City," by the modern and highly successful Viennese composer, Erich Wolfgang Korngold.

"Symphony No. 8".....Beethoven

The "Eighth Symphony" was one of Beethoven's favorites. In fact, he preferred it to the immortal "Seventh," strange as this may seem. He even called it "much the better one" of the two. I think the reason of this fondness was because he wrote it in order to forget the despair into which illness, poverty, and family troubles at the time had plunged him. It certainly has the feeling of a determined effort on the part of the composer to have done with his misery. It was written at the time of his worst troubles with his brother, Johann, whose marriage to a rather notorious lady of the times (Beethoven called her the "Queen of the Night") upset Beethoven terribly. His own illness had taken him to Telplitz for some bathing treatments; thence to Lenz (where Johann lived), and where the symphony was written.

There is a strain of sardonic humor throughout this symphony. It starts off immediately on this nearly harsh vein. The development section emphasizes this still more, with its basic octaves and the quasi-careless throwing about of the main theme from one section of the orchestra to another. After the climax and the recapitulation, the coda is wilder still, and the movement, after three forte chords, ends as abruptly as it has started; in fact,

Modern Art Gallery Shows Work of Parisian Painters

Air-Less Quality Is Pronounced in the Cosmopolitan Group On Display Here

By Alice Graeme.

An exhibition of Paris paintings of today has been assembled by the Museum of Modern Art Gallery for a third showing of this season. It is an ambitious task to attempt to present, in a single exhibition, a cross-section of contemporary work of the many painters of different nationalities now in Paris. With the co-operation, however, of the Societe de l'Art Present, a French organization whose aim is to bring living artists into more direct contact with the public, the committee of the museum has arranged the current showing. A large group of pictures, never before exhibited in this country, has been sent direct from Paris, and many others have been loaned from dealers and American private collections.

The exhibition, though necessarily far from comprehensive, does contain samples of widely diversified expression. No one style emerges as predominant from the showing. There are the realists, the surrealists, and the primitives; and there are painters who represent the decorative, the nostalgic, and the coldly intellectual points of view. The pictures sent from abroad are almost entirely the work of painters who are little known here. The canvases obtained in this country are, for the most part, by artists of more familiar names—Picasso, Matisse, Utrillo, Friesz and others. The show as a whole offers much in the way of contrasts and comparisons between the younger group, less seen here, and the older painters so often exhibiting in New York and elsewhere.

In the last few years much has been done to stimulate interest in French painters. The New York dealers have imported many canvases, both good and bad, and have placed great emphasis on their effort to encourage a market for French art. Yet most of the artists shown have been of the established group, the names that already mean something to the American public. It is much more rare to have the chance to see what the younger men are doing. The present show is noteworthy in that it provides that opportunity, at least in part.

Paul Strecker's "La Partie de Balloon," above, is included in the "Paris Paintings of Today" at the Museum of Modern Art

Lack of Air Marked

It is interesting to note among these less familiar painters certain artists who seem to have developed what might be called an air-less painting. Their canvases are as flat and unreal as stage sets, the color is somber and lifeless. They tend to paint an angular, hard surface, and there is little to suggest enjoyment or spontaneity in what they are doing. Georges Rohner's "The Sculptor" shows clearly the manner of this group. The painting is extraordinarily cold and bare. Another such painter is Andre Marchand with his "Les Bergers," an austere landscape, peopled by figures in strangely frozen attitudes. Marchand, however, has a more sensitive brush than Rohner, as may be seen in his dark and almost delicate "Paysage de Provence." Bob Humblot, Paul Strecker and Claude Venard, with varying degrees of coldness, paint much in the same air-less, somber manner.

The work of Henri Jannot who also paints in this style, is represented by a large canvas, "The Bathers." Here there is considerably more light, a gayer palette, and a more rhythmic design. The two nudes in the foreground, though stylized, are painted with strength, and the little figure in a striped bathing suit has life and action. Jannot has gone beyond the austerity of the others, and has expressed a certain charm, still with the same flat planes. His forms have a relation to each other which the others of the same manner have not.

Though Jean Balthus has a certain stiffness, and a leaning toward the set, cold manner of Rhoner, Marchand and the others, he has a distinction of his own. Certainly one of the most interesting of the younger French painters, his work at 28 is remarkably able. In his New York exhibition last year he attracted much attention with his striking, realistic portraits. He paints on large canvases, with a rather architectural approach and fine draftsmanship. His portaits of Derain, and of Joan Miro and his daughter, have been particuarly admired. In the current exhibition his "Young Girl Resting" combines and almost academic technique with a bold naturalness.

Primitives Represented

In the exhibition of "Masters of Popular Painting" held last winter at the New York Museum of Modern Art, the work of several French modern primitives was greatly admired. Two among these are now included in the present exhibition, Camille Bombois and Jean Eve. Bombois was the son of a French river boatman, and is completely a man of the people. He has been to war, worked hard and painted when he could. His pictures show the painstakingly honest technique of the real primitive. Jean Eve began painting when he was 15. After many vicissitudes he finally found a night job in the Paris toll house, which now leaves him free to paint by day. His "Farmhouse" shown here is executed with remarkable clarity and strength. The Perls Galleries in New York are giving Eve a one-man show this month.

Among the others, the sophisticated and well organized canvas by Maurice Poncelet, "The Ballet Dancer," is of outstanding quality. The work of this artist is practically unknown in this country, but this single painting makes one eager to see more of his work. The imaginative and gayly painted canvas by Pierre Ino, represents the surrealists of today, and in the work of Jean Janin, a Swiss painter, there is the decorative quality of theater design.

After considering a few of the pictures of the younger painters it is interesting to turn again to the more familiar style of Segonzac, Friesz, Vlaminck and the other standard painters. The present exhibition has been able to obtain particularly fine examples of their work The "Paysage," by Vlaminck is unusually compact and vibrant with rich color, and Utrillo's "Le Moulin de la Galette" is a winter landscape of great delicacy. The veteran Othon Friesz is well represented by his "Porte de Toulon," and Segonzac's "Pont de Joinville" shows the richness of his warm paint quality. There is interesting work by both Jean and Raoul Dufy, Matisse and Rouault. In general, the younger, newly imported group has not progressed so far beyond the achievements of the more standard painters. They are exploring many avenues, some of which may well turn out to be dead end. The French tradition has been better served than by what we see of the younger men in the current exhibition of Paris painters.

Cikovsky Exhibition at Whyte Shows Fine Work and Variety

Uneven in Output, Pictures Illustrate Freedom in Experiment

The Whyte Gallery has assembled a group of oils, water colors and pastels by Nicolai Cikovsky, and is presenting the work of this interesting artist in a one-man show, on view until February 16. Cikovsky, born in Poland in 1894, has been in this country since 1923. He is a naturalized citizen and a resident of Washington. For some time Cikovsky taught in St. Paul, Minn., and also at the Cincinnati Art Academy. Over a period of years his painting has been receiving a growing acclaim. He has won frequent medals, including the Logan First Purchase Prize at the Art Institute of Chicago in 1933, and the First Purchase Prize at the Worcester Art Museum, also in the same year. Mrs. Edith Halpert, the discerning director of the Downtown Gallery in New York, has been showing the work of Cikovsky for years. It was in a one-man show there last winter that "Girl in Green" was presented to the public. This fine portrait by Cikovsky was bought in October for the permanent collection of the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

In the current exhibition at the Whyte Gallery there is rather an uneven selection of Cikovsky's work. Some of the water colors and several of the pastels are particularly fine, but the oils are not his best pieces. It would have been greatly to the show's advantage to have added a few of his excellent canvases owned in museum and private collections throughout the country. As it is, the exhibition is unable to present as complimentary or as well-rounded a picture of Cikovsky's work as he deserves.

"Spring Flowers," by Nicolai Cikovsky, included in the one-man show at the Whyte Gallery

Uneven in Output

It is surprising how uneven in output Cikovsky is, and in what different moods he chooses to paint. In a way, it is rather encouraging to find a man who can be as flexible and as little set in his point of view. At times he reaches great heights in his paint quality, again he seems to disregard brush work and be more intent on composition. His emphasis varies, and he is not yet arrived at a full synthesis of all his powers. Yet if certain works lack quality or seem harsh, there are others that make up for it handsomely. Freedom of experimentation is healthy, and Cikovsky has at his disposal the essential qualities to develop fine painting.

Most interesting of the oils in his large still life, superb in the sheer brilliance of its paint quality. Despite the fact that the composition is not well knit and a little topheavy, the painting has great quality alone through the richness of the color harmonies. The softly brushed feathers, the small vase on the round table, the blue cloth in the background are painted with the greatest finesse. In such a canvas as his "Farm Girl" the color range is almost harsh, the blues and reds are flat and lacking in the delicate brush work of the still life. Again in his landscape, "Old Church, Virginia," there is the same stiffness and flat almost posted handling of the color. The figure of a man standing near the mailbox is deftly and easily painted, but the houses in the same canvas are sharp and angular, while the dark blue sky is as unreceding and dead as the wall of a room.

Freedom in Water Colors

In his water colors there is greater freedom, and none of the stiffness sometimes apparent in the oils. Here is a fresh and spontaneous use of the medium. The colors are clear and light, and the line is free and well adapted to the landscape subjects. These papers have an easy and unstudied quality, and show a sensitiveness and sophisticated point of view. A particularly compact and delightful example is "Rockport," done in an abbreviated but convincing manner.

In "Spring Flowers," a study in gouache, Mr. Cikovsky has combined the subtle color and painting of his oils with the freshness of his water colors. One of the most charming pictures in the exhibition, these flowers in a yellow vase against a background of delicious grey are exquisitely painted. A yellow figured tapestry on a table repeats, in its gay colors, the soft colors of the spring flowers. There is a sense of the artist's enjoyment in what he painted, and his pleasure is reflected in the charm and delicacy of the whole delightful composition.

With pastel Cikovsky is again completely at home. There is none of the sloppy technique too often seen in the application of this medium. On the contrary, he uses it with great distinction. In such a drawing as "Girl With a Rose" there is a softness of tone, the quality which pastel, well handled, can render better than other mediums. Other fine pastels are "Interior," an interesting composition with a table before a window and a glimpse of a winter scene beyond, and his dark and rich still life, "Sumac Flowers." In "Desert" he is less successful—doubly so, as this inadequate sketch was the study for a mural panel. On dark papers, Cikovsky has made two other pastels, combined with an ink wash. One of the two, "Chesapeake Bay," has an interesting and diversified composition, while the other, "Willow Tree," is too loose and rather slight. In this comparison there is still another example of Cikovsky's uneven talent.—A. G.

Regional Show at Corcoran Gallery

Jury Awards Popular At Exhibit Marked By Academic Standard

The 1939 exhibition of the Society of Washington Artists, now on view at the Corcoran Gallery of Art, is a regional showing, limited to painters and sculptors from Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

An old society, organized for almost 50 years, the exhibtion is characterized by somewhat academic standards. A most commendable effort has been made, however, to make the exhibition as attractive as possible to younger and progressive artists by inviting an entirely independent and nonpartisan jury of award. This year the jury was composed of Jonas Lie, Henry Varnum Poor, Harry Leith-Ross and Fausta Mengarini Corte.

The award of prizes this year has met with general approval. It is seldom that one has the satisfaction of feeling as much in accord with almost the whole list of a jury's awards. Quality has been sought without deviation to a superficial interest in subject matter. Also the more prosaic and academic works of better established artists have been passed over, in a few of the awards, for the fresher works of younger painters.

Paul Arlt's Painting Best

Paul T. Arlt's "Mohegan Harbor" won the Evening Star's prize of $100 for the best painting in the show. There is a nice relationship in the different grays of the choppy water, the fishermen's shacks and the heavy storm clouds. Mr. Arlt's work has been steadily improving in the last few years till he has developed an individual and rather strong manner.

The society's medal for figure composition (including portraiture) went to Nicolai Cokovsky for his portrait, "Hugh Collins." This canvas is undoubtedly one of the finest pictures in the exhibition. Painted in a rather more realistic manner than usual in Mr. Cikovsky's work, the portrait is extremely vigorous in color and strong in composition. The sitter, Hugh Collins, is a young artist well known in Washington, whose jovial, robust character is in every line of this striking portrait.

Head of Francis Whitman, by Ethel P. Hood, awarded the bronze medal for sculpture by the Society of Washington Artists

Mr. Cikovsky has painted the whole picture as a study in reds and greens. He has posed Mr. Collins in a bright red shirt against a bottle-green background and used the different gradations of these two colors throughout his canvas. There is boldness in the color and in the pose of the figure, planted squarely in the center of the canvas. This is one of those pictures that just seem to have gone off well—Cikovsky has painted a portrait which is uncannily successful. Richard Lahey, director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, won honorable mention in this group with his delightful "Sketch of Angie."

Coale Landscape Wins

The landscape prize went to Donald Coale, of Baltimore, for his entry, "Grey Morning." Mr. Coale is a young painter whose work has frequently been exhibited here in Washington, particularly at the Phillips Gallery and formerly at Studio House. He is perhaps better known for his small portrait studies than he is for his landscapes. Coale has an agreeable and rather subtle sense of color, painting freely and with imagination.

The jury became interested in two other pictures also in the landscape class and awarded two honorable mentions, one to Mary Louise Cline for "Summer Afternoon" and and the other to Mary Bradley for "Hay Stacks." Miss Cline's painting is a rather clever study, in greens, of a summer thunderstorm. Against the dark background of a green mountain, slanting rain descends upon a hillside cottage. Trees and grasses bend in the wind and there is an effective touch of luminous yellow light appearing just over the mountain. Clothes wildly flapping on a line give added action to this well observed canvas.

Miss Bradley has painted a charming landscape in which both the delicate colors of her light palette and the organization of her sound composition are unusually well sustained. There is a sensitive handling of the silvery light in her clouds and the expressive movement in the branches of the tres. Miss Bradley is a young painter who has seldom exhibited, but this picture marks her as an artist with feeling and ability.

Robert Franklin Gates, who won the medal for still life with his arrangement of ducks and corncobs, is primarily a landscape painter. An instructor at the Phillips Gallery Art School, his work is well known and much favored in Washington. His prizewinning painting has some nice passages but the rather unusual choice of color in the yellow corn on a ground is not altogether happy.

Ethel Hood Takes Medal

Listing Jeanne Begien's "Corms Have Thrips," a greenhouse interior, as a still life, the jury awarded honable mention to this painting. Among the several sculptures of small animals, figures and busts, Ethel P. Hood won the medal with her realistic "Portrait of Francis Whitman."

In addition to the prize list a number of other paintings are of considerable interest and must have run close seconds. Oke Nordgren's "On Long Island" is one of this artist's best landscapes. His color here is more mellow and less harsh than before. The blues and tans of the houses at the edge of an indented shore-line are worked into a sound organization.

Not to be overlooked is Susanne M. Mullett's amusing and gayly painted front yard of a country antique dealer, entitled "Collector's Paradise." Interesting among the portraits are Sybil Bonbright's "Elizabeth;" C. Law Watkins' "Portrait of Michele," and the self-portrait of Andrea Peitro Zerega.

Service Units Meet Friday For Class

Instruction in Mobilization Methods To Be Given

All service units of the local Organized Reserve will gather Friday at headquarters in the Munitions Building for instruction in mobilization procedure, it is announced.

The local reserve troop schools will begin the week's training tomorrow night, when personnel of the 428th Infantry meet in Room 3029 of the Munitions Building to witness a motion picture on "Infantry Hasty Field Fortifications" and "Map Reading."

Tuesday night all infantry units will receive instruction on "Drill—The Rifle Platoon," and signal units "Signal Communications in Meeting Engagement." The latter meeting is at 7:30 in Room 3029. Field Artillery officers will continue their map problem at a meeting on Wednesday night.

With attendance restricted to military intelligence officers, personnel of that branch are to report to Maj. Gwynn Wednesday, at the center door of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh street northwest, for instruction in "Interrogation of Prisoners and Raids."

On Thursday, all engineer units will meet in Room 3614 on the "Engineer Board and Developments in Engineer Equipment." During the second hour the training films, "Training Employment of Antiaircraft Artillery Regiments" and "Tactical Employment of a Battery of 155 mm. Guns, Sensing of Field Artillery Fire" will be shown in Room 3614. Also on Thursday night the Candidates School will take up Lesson 4 in Aerial Photograph Reading in Room 2530 at 7:30.

Ex-Regulars Enroll In Army Reserve Under New Ruling

Due to recent changes in regulations governing enlistments in the Regular Army Reserve many former regulars now find they are eligible for enlistment and are promptly enrolling, according to Sergt. Norman W. Morgan, chief clerk of the local Army recruiting station, located in the Farm Credit Building, 1300 E street northwest.

Honorably discharged former regulars under 36 years old and in good physical condition are eligible for the Reserve. Married men are now eligible and, under a change in regulations, enlistment in the grade from which discharged is permitted. Recruiting officials describe the Regular Army Reserve as "the soldier's Utopia" because men go on the pay roll without having to take drills, lectures, camps, studies or activities of any kind.

For the convenience of former regulars who may not be able to visit the local recruiting office during business hours officials state that they may phone and arrange an appointment at their convenience.

Petworth Lodge

On Tuesday evening of this week, the Fellowship Club of Petworth Lodge will hold a meeting at the home of Mason Trittipoe, 1825 Monroe street northwest.

Col. Villaret Will Instruct Defense Unit

The District of Columbia antiaircraft defense unit, the 260th Coast Artillery will soon receive the latest type air defense weapons and a new Regular Army instructor.

Officials state that personnel of the unit are to go to the Aberdeen

LIEUT. COL. VILLARET

Proving Ground, Maryland, later this month and drive back the first units of the most modern antiaircraft guns and equipment. The present weapons of the regiment are sadly out of date, it was said.

Later in the spring, the 260th will be assigned a new instructor—Lieut. Col. Eugene Villaret, Coast Artillery, U. S. A. Col. Villaret has been on duty at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, as military attache to that country and to Rumania and Greece.

A native of Pennsylvania, Col. Villaret graduated from West Point in 1914 and served in France during the World War. He is a graduate of the Command and General Staff School, the Coast Artillery School, the Quartermaster Subsistence School and the Ecole Superieure de Guerre in Paris. After the World War he served a tour as assistant military attache to France.

Speakers' Club Meets

At their last regular meeting, the members of the Speaker's Club, which meets every Friday evening at the Jessup Blair Community House in Silver Spring, elected officers for the coming year. The new officers: W. F. Wilkinson, president; Hunter Davidson, vice president; and D. L. Bowman, secretary-treasurer, will be installed at a banquet to be held this Friday, February 3. W. T. Allen will be toastmaster.

Army, Navy Wondering How Many Heads Roosevelt Will Go Over to Replace Retiring High Command

Likelihood of War Historically Gives the Young Men a Break

By J. Gilbert Norris

With most of the Army and Navy high command scheduled for replacement this year, the services are watching to see if the top billets go to ranking officials or if the Commander-in-Chief will jump far down the lists in filling the important posts.

In a number of recent appointments President Roosevelt has sought younger blood and has picked relatively junior officers for key jobs in the military and naval set-up. Observers have pointed out that this tendency is natural in view of the times. Throughout our history, it is said, when the world was at peace, appointments have gone to the next ranking officers, but as war clouds gather, the selection of some outstanding junior is likely.

In the World War, it will be recalled, John J. Pershing was picked from the bottom of the list of general officers to head the A. E. F. Two of the Navy Bureau chiefs, were young commanders. Similarly, after the war, Captains William S. Benson and Robert B. Coontz, were appointed to the highest naval post, Chief of Naval Operations.

Today, as war rages in Europe and Asia, and a strong Germany has its way at Munich, this policy again comes to the fore. Commanders Ben Moreell and Ross T. McIntire were jumped over the heads of many seniors to be Chief Civil Engineer and Surgeon General of the Navy. Commander Ralph R. Waesche was appointed Commandant of the Coast Guard and Brig. Gen. Thomas Holcomb Maj. Gen. Commandant of Marines. Younger men were placed at the head of the Military and Naval Academies, to give another example, Brig. Gen. Jay L. Benedict and Rear Admiral Wilson Brown.

At least two top positions in the Army and probably the entire Navy high command will be replaced this spring and summer. Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff of the Army, must retire for age the end of August, while the four-year term of Maj. Gen. Frank M. Andrews as Commander of the General Headquarters Air Force expires the end of this month. Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, and Harry E. Yarnell, Commander of the Asiatic Fleet, also reach the statutory age limit of the naval service. Their retirement and the resulting shifts probably means, officials state, that all of the four-star admirals and vice admiral billets will change hands, for the first time in years.

A distinct possibility, however, in connection with the Chief of Naval Operations post, is that Admiral Leahy may be continued for a time after his retirement. This is possible under the law and the President may not wish to change both his chief military and naval advisors at the same time. War Department officials said that the retention of Gen. Craig is probably not legally possible.

Outstanding prospect to succeed Gen. Craig is Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, commander of the First Army at New York City. A general officer during the World War and most of the years since, and with a brilliant record, he is considered in line for the appointment. Just below him and with an equally good record is Maj. Gen. John L. DeWitt, commandant of the War College here. Most of the other major generals are nearing the retirement age, and many believe that the President will skip that rank entirely and name a junior brigadier general, such as George C. Marshall, now deputy chief of staff.

Colonels in Line

Practically all of the colonels and lieutenant colonels of the Air Corps are in line for appointment as GHQ Air Force commander. In addition, the President must name a successor to Brig. Gen. Augustine Robbins, assistant chief of Air Corps. The latter's term expired last week.

The names of the present Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of the United States Fleet are most of ten mentioned in connection with naval high command shift. Admiral Claude C. Bloch, commander-in-chief of the Fleet, may come here as chief of naval operations, it is said. Alterately, it predicted that he may continue in his present job for another year.

Admiral Edward C. Kalbfus, now second in command of the Fleet, may step up to commander-in-chief. He has another year to do at sea under normal procedure and nearly three years until retirement. Vice Admiral Adolphus Andrews, commander of the scouting force and recently on duty here as chief of the Bureau of Navigation, is a likely prospect for either the Fleet command or as chief of naval operations. Rear Admiral J. O. Richardson, chief of the Bureau of Navigation since last summer, may either relieve Admiral Leahy as chief of operations or go to China as Admiral Yarnell's successor, according to speculation in naval circles.

Should President Roosevelt jump these ranking officials in filling the top Navy commands, officers state that Rear Adm. Harold R. Stark, recently Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, is a likely "youthful" selection.

Two Navy Department bureau chiefs must be appointed this spring, as Rear Adm. Charles Conard, paymaster general, retires the first of April, and the term of Rear Adm. Harold G. Bowen, Chief of the Bureau of Engineering, expires June 1. In line for the paymaster generalcy are senior captains Frederick G. Payne and Ray Spear, but the prospect of a commander being named is not at all remote. Admiral Bowen, only 56, may be reappointed, it is said.

As the result of the "accent on youth" in the services, the average age of Army general officers has been reduced by two or three years. This came about from a policy adopted by Gen. Craig when he became Chief of Staff three years ago, of appointing only officers with at least six years to serve to general's rank. Brig Gen. Daniel I. Sultan, 53, former D. C. Commissioner is the youngest permanent line general, while Brig Gen. Walter Kilner, 50, is youngest temporary officer of that rank.

Special Board Calls On Local Officers For Recommendations On Administration

Officers of the Marine Corps Reserve living ni the Washington area were asked yesterday to submit suggestions and recommendations regarding the administration of the reserve to the special board now studying the problem.

Readers' School Forum

By Helen Drake

Each week this column will present representative answers of Washington citizens to a problem confronting students, parents of students, or teachers of students. Readers are invited to send in questions they'd like answered to The Post Education Editor. Today's question is:

R. G. VANDERLIP, 241 Quackenbos street northwest—English instructor . . . It's up to the individual student to get through foundation in English. All students have an equal opportunity for acquiring an extensive vocabulary, proper spelling, pronunciation, and grammar, and if they take this opportunity, they would have a thorough foundation. By and large, I believe, they have a more fundamental foundation in English today then boys and girls of the same age 30 years ago.

F. O. FEINSILVER, 529 Lamont street northwest, auditor . . . A student can only get out of a subject what he puts into it. Although the high schools offer an adequate knowledge of English to the students, the parents do not teach them the necessity of this valuable training while they are in school and, therefore, they do not take this subject seriously.

MRS. S. B. BRUTON, 1305 West Virginia avenue northeast. Yes. In my own personal experience I have found that most of the girls can construct a letter that is correct in spelling, grammar and punctuation. As a rule, most graduates are good spellers, but lack the experience of the business world.

MRS. E. McLAUGHLIN, 1931 Calvert street northwest, hospital aide . . . Judging from the English I have heard, I say that they positively do not have the fundamentals of English. In fact, the English language, as a whole, is running down and people don't speak as well as they used to. Teachers should stress the fact that constant practice is necessary for the mastery of the subject.

S. HOGAN, 1526 Seventeenth street northwest, furniture salesman . . . No. There are four fundamental reasons why students are not thorough in the English foundation; insufficient time given to the subject, lack of interest on part of the teacher and the student, inability to concentrate, and lack of application.

MRS. E. GRAD, 926 Massachusetts avenue northwest, manager of a laundry . . . Yes. As English is required for four years in the high schools, the majority of graduates can express themselves in a very interesting manner. A foreign language should not be taught to students who don't like English. The student should be taught to consider English as one of the most important subjects he takes.

MRS R. FOWLER, 6746 Fairfax road, Bethesda, Md. No. Most students do not have the command of English because the subject is not made colorful and interesting by the teacher. Another great factor is the lack of home training. English should be an instrument for pleasure and not for the technical parts of a sentence.

A. P. MERGARDT, 1005 New York avenue northwest, manager . . . No. Most of the responsibility rests on the students themselves, but if the home environment is such that it retards education, the task is greater. If correct English isn't practiced constantly, 90 per cent of it is lost, and the student cannot regain that without strenuous effort on his part.

Chase to Lecture On Decorating

Stanhope Chase, well known Washington decorator, will inaugurate a series of illustrated lectures in interior decorating Friday night at the Institute of Social Arts, 2017 S street northwest. The lecturer will discuss furniture arrangement, color fabrics, wall and floor covering and accessories. The series is also scheduled to cover specific problems presented by members of Mr. Chase's class.

Dr. Kindler's Notes

with the identical notes of the beginning.

The "Allegretto Scherzando" is what its name implies. With its ticking woodwinds, the assertion that it was in part intended to mock Maelzel, the inventor of the metronome, does not seem too far fetched. What is more important is the spirit of its frank and ingenious gaiety, which throughout this short movement speaks for itself.

The third movement in "tempo di minuetto" starts boisterously, but subsequently becomes more lyrical. In the trio the only real cantabile melody of the entire symphony appears, but even then a tripping accompaniment in the cellos preserves the "lighter" character which is the symphony's underlying motive-power. This quality becomes in the finale a veritable riot. If ever Beethoven (as has been said) was apt to become "unbuttoned" in his humor, it is in this quite Rabelaisian movement. But where most commentators agree on this particular quality, that which is often overlooked is the humor's eventual grandeur. This was the result of a boldness of invention which stands nearly alone in the realm of music. What this sometimes, even for our ears, nearly strident harshness of contrasts (for instance, continuous Cs against C sharp) must have sounded like to the ears of the good people of the time we can readily imagine. To me it is one of Beethoven's grandest efforts in the realm of humor, bucolic to a degree, and therefore true to his own innermost idea of what humor should be. In a lesser man's treatment it might have easily become merely strident or even commonplace. With Beethoven, humor becomes what it had been in the minds of Erasmus and Rabelais, Shakespeare and Cervantes, namely, laughter of the gods. And it is when it is divine that humor takes its place with the qualities of "deep feeling," etc., which are often (and without justification) considered to have been "greater." Eventually, as in the case of the above-mentioned great ones, humor takes its proper and deservedly high place; and so with Beethoven in his "Eighth Symphony," it becomes, once again, Olympian.

"On the Steppes of Central Asia" . . . . Borodin

The composer himself has given us a description of the work, which I herewith translate: "In the silence of the sandy steppes of Central Asia we hear the refrain of a peaceful Russian song. We also hear the melancholy sounds of oriental chants. We hear the hoofbeats of horses and camels approaching; a caravan escorted by Russian soldiers traverses the immense desert; continues its long voyage without fear, abandoning itself with confidence to the watchfulness of its protectors. The songs of the Russians and those of the natives melt together in a semiharmony, and their refrains are heard for a long time in the desert, gradually becoming lost in the infinite distance."

"Islamey," Fantaisie Orientale . . . . Balakirev

"Islamey," by Balakirev, is another Russian composition in which oriental influences are evident. It is one of the few compositions of this composer known today. His influence on younger musicians (it was he who founded the famous group of five in Russia, including Moussorgsky, Cui, Borodin and Rimsky) in what makes him important in the history of music.

The return to native folk tunes in order to create a genuine Russian art of music, which he preached incessantly and to the exclusion of other influences, gives him historical significance, and inspired him to create a few genuinely original works of which "Islamey" is the most conspicuous example. It was inspired by a journey through the Caucasus, and is built on three melodies of semi-oriental character—a brilliant opening of turbulent and violent rhythms, leads to a lovely interlude of melodic charm; and this is followed by a return to the first part, which leads to a brilliant and exciting finish.

Shahan Society Begins Debate Schedule

Five Meets Slated At Home, Seven Away From Campus

The debating schedule for the Shahan Debating Society of the Catholic University for the spring season was announced yesterday by the Rev. P. J. O'Connor, acting dean of men and moderator of the society. The schedule includes five debates in Washington and seven debates away from home for the varsity debating teams and four Washington debates for the freshmen.

"That Business Should Be Financed by the Government" has been selected as the topic for the varsity debates, with one exception, the debate with the University of Georgia. This subject has been selected by all the intercollegiate debaters throughout the United States as the debate question for the current academic year.

Manhattan College will be met next Friday evening, February 10, in McMahon Hall auditorium on the university campus, with John J. Hart, jr., '41, and Francis A. Spitzig, '40, taking the affirmative side of the question for Catholic University. Fordham University will be debated before the Catholic Sisters College Saturday evening, February 11, with Robert Stickle, '41, and Robert T. Miller, '41, speaking for C. U.

William Hotz, '39, and Walter J. Donovan, '40, will debate the University of Georgia on February 15, taking the affirmative of the question, "That Modern Civilization Destroys Personality." On February 20, Cornelius L. Maloney, '40, and Leo S. Schumacher, '40, will debate Holy Cross College and John P. Morrow, '39, and William A. Endebrock, '41, will oppose Boston College on April 1.

Away from home William J. Hotz, '39, and Walter J. Donovan, '40, will uphold the affirmative on the question, "That Business Should Be Financed by the Government" before Trinity College, of Hartford, Conn., on February 27, while Cornelius L. Maloney and Leo S. Schumacher will take the negative side in a debate with Manhattan College in New York City the same evening. Hotz and Donovan will again take the affirmative against Holy Cross College, at Worcester, Mass., on February 28, while the Maloney-Schumacher team will oppose Fordham, at New York, the same night, upholding a negative point of view.

Cunard Plans Weekly Cruise To Bahamas

Service Will Start May 6, Continue Until December 9

Cunard White Star announces that it will inaugurate a weekly cruise service to Nassau on May 6, continuing it until December 9. In all 32 cruises will be made. The main ship will be the Lancastria, which will make 30 of the round trips. On June 3 the Carinthia and on September 16 the new Mauretania will each take over a cruise in order to give the Lancastria crew vacations.

The Lancastria was remodeled several years ago for cruising in the tropics. She made numerous trips out of England to resorts in the Azores, the Madeiras, the Canaries and countries on the Mediterranean Sea.

According to the present schedule the Lancastria will leave New York every Saturday at 5 p. m., reaching Nassau at 6 a. m. the following Tuesday. She will leave Nassau Wednesday at 1 a. m., arriving back in New York Friday noon. This schedule allows for a stay approximately 18 hours ashore in Nassau.

The minimum rate for the Lancastria cruises will be $55, with stopover privilege $80, one-way passage, $50.

At the present time Cunard White Star is operating a series of eight-day cruises to Nassau and Havana with the Georgic and Britannic. These cruises will continue until the middle of April.

The Lancastria has been painted white for the Nassau cruise service, white being heat-resisting in the tropics.

North Carolina Season Plans

Southern Pines, N. C.

The program of entertainment for February will get off to a start on Tuesday evening with the chambers of commerce of Aberdeen, Southern Pines, Pinehurst and Carthage holding their annual banquet and get-together meeting at the Carolina Hotel, Pinehurst. Former Representative J. Walter Lambeth, of Washington, will make the principal address of the evening. He will be introduced by former State Senator Union L. Spence, dean of the Moore County bar.

The activities will continue with the Pine Dodgers, the women's golfing organization at the Southern Pines Country Club, entertaining at a large luncheon at the country club on Wednesday. The luncheon will be preceded by an 18-hole medal tournament being played over the No. 1 grass green course. The tournament will be open to visiting golfers at the hotels. Miss Laura Kelsey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Preston T. Kelsey, of Montclair, N. J., will be in charge.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Emmett E. Boone, of West Hampton Beach, Long Island, will be hostess at a bridge luncheon at the Pine Needles Club in Knollwood. The sport events for the week include an 18-hole medal tournament, to be played at the Southern Pines Country Club Saturday and Sunday, and will be followed with another tournament at the Pine Needles Club on Sunday.

Winter Tourists on Iroquois Will Visit Sunny Climes

Winter will be a forgotten word to those sailing February 15 on the 13-day West Indies cruise aboard the Clyde-Mallory liner Iroquois to exchange Northern ice and chills for sunshine and exotic scenes.

En route to Miami, Havana and Puerto Rico, the Iroquois will provide a complete and varied program of ably directed sports tournaments, festive dinner parties and romantic dances. Placid hours will be spent sunning in a cozy deck chair, or for the more ambitious, a fun-packed game of shuffleboard or quoits.

Two stops at Miami, one on the trip southward and again on returning, will enable the sun-seekers to loll on gleaming, warm beaches, comfortable and contented in the sun, or frolic in the gleeming crystal-clear water. Big game fishing has its enthusiastic devotees, matching their wits and brawn against tuna, sailfish, giant ray—even sharks. Others will make it a point to be at palm-fringed Hialeah for the racing; watch the closely contested speedboat and sailboat races on blue Biscayne Bay, or saunter about the shipping and entertainment centers.

Grim, frowning Morro Castle will greet the Iroquois as it rounds La Marine Point to enter San Juan, Puerto Rico's cozy, quaint, interesting resort city. Regarded as one of the most remarkable examples in the western world of an old walled city, San Juan opens an extensive vista of historical interest, with ample time to enjoy it.

Atop a hill in La Fortaleza, built in 1639, to be used as a residence for the Spanish governor. Now it is occupied by the American governor of the island. Then there is Morro Castle, a superb example of an old colonial fortress, sternly guarding the harbor since 1539.

Mythology trickles interestingly through San Juan's history. In all probability, the visitor, browsing through old San Cristobal Fort that overlooks the Atlantic, will be told how one of the sentry boxes was haunted and sentinel after sentinel disappeared in a burst of flame and a cloud of sulphurous smoke. The harassed Spanish governor finally ordered that the passage to the sentry box be walled up.

Sparkling, carefree Havana will be the next stop on this sunshine cruise. A full day will be spent mingling with the gay cosmopolitan throng, laughing and dancing and being hilariously amused at the smart restaurants, glittering night clubs and native cabarets bursting with life and rhumba music. Havana is a charming, gracious hostess that is always remembered.

Shopping baskets crammed with intriguing wares and trinkets from the native markets and bazaars, the visitors will enjoy "foreign" surroundings by wandering leisurely about the age-mellowed streets of San Juan and Havana, discovering new thrills and sights that push winter far back in the mental background.

Cruises to the southern sunshine cities have become a yearly ritual with many tourists, heightening the winter exodus to such an extent that the Iroquois is scheduled to make two additional cruises on March 1 and 15.

12,000 Miles of Sunshine

Cook's 1939 Cairo-to-the-Cape Safari, now en route under the leadership of Capt. George F. Shearwood, drew its American membership from all points of the compass. The four men and four women who sailed from New York early in January to begin the trip to Cairo came from such widely separated parts of the United States as Kennebunk, Me., and Charleston, W. Va.; Madison, Wis., and Washington, D. C.; Utica, N. Y., and Dallas, Tex.; Cincinnati, Ohio, and San Francisco, Calif. When the safari, booked to capacity of 11, is joined at Shellal by its remaining member, from Australia, Capt. Shearwood will have with him a group which hails, almost literally, from the Arctic to the Antipodes, to enjoy 12,000 miles of African winter sunshine and de luxe adventure.

Japanese Liner Renamed Kamakura

The transpacific liner Chichibu Maru has been officially renamed Kamakura Maru, S. Yanase, of the N. Y. K. Line, said.

Kamakura is the first place of interest to American tourists entering Japan after arriving in Yokohama. Thousands of tourists have photographs of themselves standing under the giant bronze Buddha or "Daibutu" of Kamakura.

Kamakura, 14 miles from Yokohama, has played a brilliant role in Japan's history. Until nearly the end of the twelfth century it was but a small fishing village. Then it rose to be the second city of the empire, with a reputed population of 200,000 persons. It remained the seat of government until 1333, when it suffered a decline which lasted until comparatively modern times.

Many relics of grandeur remain in addition to the giant Buddha. These include the interesting temples of Kentyozi and Enkakuzi and the great shrine of Turugaoka. Kamakura is now a popular watering place for Japan's elite, with a resident population of 8,000.

The Bridge Deck

By Florence Osborn.

Whatever satisfaction whist players may receive from their skillful attack and defense, the thrills of individual dummy play are denied them.

The neatly executed throw-in, based upon accurate appraisal of the adversaries' holdings, made by Walter Malowan upon today's hand, illustrates the fine art to which declarer's play at no trump has been developed.

Opening lead: 7 ◇.

The hand was dealt during a rubber bridge game we recently watched at the Regency Club.

Walter was playing with Raymond Balfe, also an ardent no trumpist who is noted for his psychic bids. Walter beat him to the contract, however, and as one no trumpist performing before another his management of the play justified his bidding.

His opponents were Theodore A. Lightner and Mrs. Louis F. Bredin, of Detroit.

After trying to establish one suit and stealing a trick in it, Walter decided to abandon the suit and attempt another line of play which the inferences of the first few tricks persuaded him would be successful. He stripped Lightner's hand of all unimportant cards, took a winning finesse against him and threw him in the lead for an end play.

This is how it was done: Lightner opened the diamond seven, dummy's king won and declarer immediately led a low club to the nine in his hand. Mrs. Bredin played low, Walter's nine held and he continued the suit. He explained afterward that had Mrs. Bredin decided to hop up with an honor, he would not have covered the jack-of-diamonds return, thus shutting out Lightner's hand from further play.

However, as Mrs. Bredin won the second club, returning the jack of diamonds, Walter decided to alter his course and he covered with the queen. This was allowed to hold, and he went to work establishing the endplay.

He took three rounds of hearts. Lightner discarded a diamond and finessed the spade queen, which held; played the ace and a low spade, throwing Teddy in the lead.

East cashed his spade king and ten, but was then forced to play his ace and a low diamond, letting Walter's ten make. South made three no trump, losing a club, two spades and a diamond.

The conclusion of the Maryland State championships in Baltimore late this evening will wind up the last unfinished business. Beginning tomorrow the Capital bridge world will have nothing to distract it in its preparations for "America's Card Party," to be held over the entire city next week. But, until the final score is balanced at the Belvedere tonight, Baltimore is the focus.

Every able-bodied member of the Washington League is playing in the tournament. The only reason for absence is the flu epidemic raging here. While the malady is not as serious, it is almost as prevalent as in the distressful year of the Armistice.

At the time this column went to press, those doughty local defenders of the Maryland Open Pair Title, Louis Newman and Al Roth, were in fine fettle. The event is now over, only the team-of-four match remaining to be played today. Teamed with John Mothershed and Joe Brotman the champions are competing also in this event. They form one of a group of local foursomes all bent on capturing the trophy of the Baltimore News Post. The Maryland tournament is second only to the District championships in local interest.

And after Baltimore comes the Virginia State Masters' Pairs, at Norfolk, on February 18, but this being an exclusive master event will not interest the hoi polloi.

Tickets for the Valentine charity card parties went on sale last week at The Washington Post. They are large red hearts, bearing the now familiar slogan, "Have a Heart—Take a Hand." The tickets cost $1 a piece. It is not necessary to attend any of the special card parties to be held over the week of February 12 at all the bridge clubs in Washington. Anybody may conduct a party of his own by merely purchasing tickets from The Post. Every penny of this money goes to the blood and serum bank to be established in Children's Hospital.

This cause is confined to the Capital. New York's charity party will be for the benefit of crippled children. Albert H. Morehead, former technician of the Culbertson Studios, predicts that while the greatest number of bridge experts will take part in the Manhattan party, Washington will have "The greatest attendance of persons in public life." From other sources it becomes apparent that the Capital is exhibit A in the American Contract Bridge League's roster of cities and towns whose inhabitants will play "for love" during this one week in the year.

In the Washington Bridge League, Thomas Hamlin has been elected head of a committee in charge of tickets. An incomplete list of members assisting him includes: Mrs. C. B. Pennebaker, Mrs. W. S. Athey, Miss Mazie Buie, Mrs. T. M. Boyle, Mrs. Eugene Nolan, Mrs. D. E. Stephan, Mrs. Charles Kavanaugh, Mrs. M. R. Reddy, Mr. and Mrs. Wessel Stewart, Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Zimmer, Leroy Thurtell, A. M. Sheppard and Harry Schwartz.

A new ruling governing the conversion of national rating points of the ACBL is of great interest to thousands of duplicate players:

In a meeting of the executive committee of the national association, held in New York, on January 15, it was voted that players who have accumulated 500 rating points may convert them to one national master point without the usual proviso that conversion can be made only after a major tournament win.

Only one point may be acquired in this manner. That is, the possession of a thousand rating points cannot be converted for more than one master point.

This ruling will affect the eligibility for the master players contests now held in nearly every city of the United States. It will also revolutionize the attitude of the players towards rating points. Heretofore these awards lost their attraction after a player succeeded in acquiring his first hundred. His first "convertible point" was a triumph, second and third points were a mere matter of routine. Now with a master point in the offing, the fruits of each win will be hoarded with infinite care.

The current season of the Federal Bridge League is shuffling the competing teams into entirely new places, the old cut-and-dry order has vanished.

In the game of January 24, the "Shuffin" foursome strode into first place with a lead of 3½ boards over "Fairchance." The old favorites, the Rangers, Crackers and Arlington, bowing to the new-comers, slipped into third, fourth, and fifth places. Postoffices's line-up dropped to seventh, a board off the Substitutes.

The three sections were won respectively by Arlington, Redskins and Plants. Pair winners were Hillingshead and Hansen and Evans and Schott, in section A. Koster, Livermore, Kessler and Fruitman, all of Redskins, led the B section pairs. Section C was a feminine victory for Laura Griffith, Peggy Monroe, Edna Schwartz and Eileen Walsh. The first pair play for Plants, Misses Schwartz and Walsh for the team of the Interior.

Camera Angles

By Arthur Ellis

Although a highly efficient army of writers continue to turn out thousands of words daily concerning Government activities, Uncle Sam in the editor's chair seems to be awakening to the value of motion pictures and still photographs in reporting his service and efforts to the Nation.

In the downtown branch of American University, 1907 F street northwest, two new night courses emphasizing the use of the camera in Government public relations were inaugurated the past week. On Wednesday night a course in "Government Documentary Films" opened, and will continue throughout a period of two semesters—ten meetings. This course will be conducted by two experts in the field, Arch Mercey, assistant director of the National Emergency Council motion picture division—the division that made "The Plough" and "The River," and William Nelson, Washington editor of Look Magazine.

On Thursday night, a course on "Government Use of Pictorial Aids" was started under the direction of Roy Stryker, chief, historical division, division of information, Farm Security Administration, and William Phillips, chief, publications division, Rural Electrification Administration. The course will continue for two semesters—ten meetings.

Although these two courses, described as "new frontiers in public relations" by Dean Arthur S. Flemming, are being offered to Government employes, anyone showing interest in the subjects will be able to register.

The development and growing importance of the motion picture as a means of transmitting to the public a visual record of the efforts of Government agencies will be discussed by documentary film producers during the semester.

Still photographs turned out by several of the Government agencies have not only proven to be a method of showing the work done by the agency but the pictures have formed an important historical document of our times.

To our mind the most successful has been the work done by the Resettlement Administration group now carrying on as the Farm Security Administration. The individual cameramen making up the photographic staff are rated tops in their field. Editors of magazines, text books and newspapers throughout the country have become familiar with the Rothstein, Lange, Lee, etc., credits. Art editors throughout the Nation recognize Resettlement and Farm Security photographs as story telling, interesting, live documents, not propaganda but records of the American scene.

Although there can be no denying the ability of the cameraman in the field, the guiding hand and moving force of this vital work is a tall premature gray figure who sits at a desk in a converted warehouse in quarters that certainly do not measure up to the importance of the man on the job. He is Roy Stryker, former Columbia University professor who years before his association with Government agencies grasped the importance of the camera in forming a historical record of the America of our times.

Stryker who can certainly speak with authority on photography in the Government information service will stress the importance of simplicity in layouts, the necessity of sequence pictures and the value of story telling single pictures during the presentation of his course.

Erwin C. Weiss is shown with his prize-winning entry in the contest conducted by the Aerial Photographic Club of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration

Last Wednesday afternoon, J. P. Johansson, Grover Plow and this writer faced some 50 mounted prints in the copying room of the Aerial Survey quarters of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration on the second floor of the Old Postoffice Building and after a brief survey gave first prize to Erwin C. Weiss for submitting the best picture in the first show conducted by the Aerial Photographic Club.

The outdoor portrait of an old woman entered by Weiss was a character study embodying the finest composition, texture, quality and subject matter of any amateur print seen in this town in some time. Even Johansson, who is a recognized technician and exacting judge, extolled the merits of the print.

Other prizes awarded were: David F Carraway, second prize; Alson H. Wheeler, third prize; honorable mentions to Al Ramee, Carraway and William Feight.

The contest was open only to employes of the Aerial Photographic Laboratory.

Weiss, the winner, lives in Alexandria and although he has been in the photographic game for the past 20 years—mostly as a laboratory man—has only submitted his work in two shows. The recent Agriculture Club show marked his initiation to the ranks, and he was awarded an honorable mention. This show was his second and he carried off first honors with ease. He used a 4x5 Graflex to make the shot and enlarged it to 8x10. He recently gave up his Graflex for a Speed Graphic and is now doing his own developing and printing at home.

The club officers did very well in the show. Carraway is president, Weiss, vice president, and Wheeler is financial secretary.

Prints from the show will be exhibited in Kinsman's window beginning next Wednesday night for a week.

The Washington 8mm. Movie Club will hold their February meeting Wednesday night at the Washington Hotel. Feature of the meeting will be a talk by E. M. Russey, well known movie and still man, on "Importance and Technique of Correct Exposure." A "newsreel" film taken by two members of the club at the recent N. B. C. television demonstration will be be shown.

At their last meeting members elected O. S. Granducci, president; Joseph M. Feigley, jr., vice president, and R. B. Armstrong, treasurer. Joseph Gawler, retiring president, and Kenneth Boardman were elected to the board of directors to fill the vacancies left by the new election. William McConnell was named program chairman.

Additional informal mid-month get-togethers are being planned as a result of the success of the first such meeting held during the past month.

Club secretary, Dr. I. Rodis, 1726 I street northwest, REpublic 1445 will be glad to answer inquires concerning possible affiliation with the club.

Bursting flash bulbs are rare but the Munder flash bulbs carry an insurance plan which protects cameramen against public liability and property damage.

The insurance is carried by the manufacturer and in the event of any injuries or damage the photographer is protected. These bulbs carry the safety coating and shattering is prevented. These are excellent bulbs and we do not know of a single case of a bursting bulb.

R. J. Fallert, jr., of the Eastman Kodak Company will speak on pictorial composition at the meeting of the Telephone Camera Club to be held tomorrow night at the C. & P. Pent House. Mr. Fallert will also judge the exhibit of landscape prints scheduled for the meeting.

Winners in the second annual Kalart Synchro-Sunlight contest are, G. A. Curtis, Minneapolis, first prize, $100; second prize to Francis H. Griswold, first lieutenant, Langley Field, Va., $50, and third prize, Forest J. Sorenson, Ames, Iowa, $25. Fifteen other cash awards were distributed.

The contest, conducted by the Kalart company for the second consecutive year to popularize the use of the synchronized flash in sunlight, was a definite success. Hundreds of entries representing each State were submitted.

The additional light serves to illuminate dark conflicting shadows and gives the subject a more pleasing roundness and a longer gradation of tone. The use of this technique to secure interesting lighting combinations has become most popular during the past year. The motion picture companies have been using this technique for years in their use of additional booster lights when filming out of doors.

At the Chess Table

By Willard Mutchler

Ernest M. Knapp and Donald H. Mugridge last Saturday contested the second game in their play-off match to determine the champion of the Capital City Chess Club. Knapp essayed a Queen's Gambit, which Mugridge promptly accepted, and after 3¾ hours of mental gymnastics, the party was adjourned. Both players, endeavoring to keep a draw well in hand, proceeded cautiously. When Mugridge sealed his thirty-eighth move each remained with a knight and five pawns. The outcome appears drawish, although Mugridge possesses some slight positional advantage owing to the fact that two of Knapp's pawns are isolated.

District Tourney in Offing

W. Kurtz Wimsatt, chairman of the District of Columbia Chess Championship Committee, has inaugurated action with respect to the annual classic, the District Championship Tournament. Wimsatt has arranged a meeting of the committee to formulate plans for the tenth annual competition for the I. S. Turover silver trophy, which will determine the holder of the highest local chessic titular honors. It is understood that an annonymous donor has made the title even more worth striving for this year, and that the winner will be presented with a suitably inscribed gold signet ring, valued at approximately $50, as a permanent token of his victory.

Future announcements of the committee are being anxiously awaited by local fandom. Its remaining members consist of Honorary Chairman I. S. Turover, C. W. Stark and D. H. Mugridge, representing the Capital City Club; E. W. Kunkle and M. L. Kessler, of the Paul Morphy Club; H. W. Horn and F. W. F. Gleason, of the Chess Divan, and W. H. Mutchler and J. B. Beadle, chosen by past contestants.

Eaton Becomes Editor

Vincent L. Eaton, local problemist whose compositions are internationally acclaimed, has recently been chosen to succeed R. Cheney, of Rochester, N. Y., as editor of the problem department of Chess Review, the foremost national periodical of its kind. Felicitations are extended to Eaton upon his new enterprise, and Chess Review is accorded even more hearty congratulations upon having acquired an editor possessing his known abilities.

Eaton, who is still in his early twenties, enjoyed a steady and rapid rise to the front ranks of problemdon. While still in his early teens, and resident in New York City, his first composition was published in The Post. Within a few years he was hailed in the Gambit as one of the country's most promising young composers. During his matriculation at Harvard University he served for a short time as problem editor of the American Chess Bulletin. Subsequently he accepted a position in the manuscript division of the Library of Congress. Since his residence here many of his problems have appeared in The Post, and countless numbers in periodicals of almost every country where chess is played.

En Passant

To those readers who had difficulty in deciphering the recently published gamelet between A. E. Sanastiere and Herbert Saldman, we reply that a singular misprint on black's very first move caused all the difficulties. The game was a Sicilian, and with P-QB4 substituted for P-K4, the remainder of the brilliant play may easily be followed.

Solutions to Problems

W. A. Shinkman's excellent two-mover, No. 807, yields to the rather difficult keymove, P-Q3. Today's unusual offering is the work of Col. J. A. Kirby, who has been active locally for several years. The present problem is somewhat remarkable for a three-mover in that no less than 28 pieces occupy the board. It was first published some years ago in the Cincinnati Enquirer, and dedicated to its chess editor, Dr. P. G. Keeney. Dr. Keeney remarked to Col. Kirby, who was at that time a professor at Berea College, Kentucky, that the composition was typically a "player's problem" by reason of the fact that the position simulates one likely to occur in over-the-board maneuvering. However, the positions of the pawns makes this impossible.

The problem below, with its numerous pieces, is in marked contrast to another of Col. Kirby's compositions, which will appear next Sunday, wherein four pieces constitute the total force in a four-mover.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

INTERESTING is the great play the Department of Agriculture will make for some of those top college graduates who, traditionally, have been snapped up for scientific positions by private industry.

They've been snapped up before the sheepskins were cold. They've enriched private industry. Agriculture personnel officers have watched all this. Now they're out in earnest for the bright boys, too. They are offering this argument:

Here is a chance to work for the greatest scientific institution in the world, the United States Department of Agriculture. Here is a job with security—come on in and make a career of it with us.

Here is the procedure: The department, through some arrangement with the Civil Service Commission, will in future years consolidate its junior professional examinations and give them to the public (and the college graduates) at an appropriate time before school lets out. Meanwhile, the department will have made a studied effort to acquaint the forthcoming graduates with the possibilities in the United States Department of Agriculture. The students will know that the United States Department of Agriculture is not the worse place in the world to work.

Further, the department will have some special interviewers to give the onceover to the most likely looking ones. It will be made known that the Department of Agriculture pays equally with private industry, grade by grade.

The first venture takes place late next month, or early in March, when the department offers 22 junior professional assistant jobs, paying $2,000 a year, lumps them up, consolidates them, and lays them at the feet of the forthcoming graduates. The examinations needless to say, are also open to the general public. But it was of the department's search for high talent from among the graduates each year that this is written.

And the department estimates that more than 1,100 junior scientists, with a starter of $2,000 per annum, will be hired this year. Among the jobs that impending graduates can strive for before graduation are junior administrative technician, junior agronomist, junior bacteriologist, junior forester, junior soil scientist, junior veterinarian, junior home economist, junior geologist, junior dairy husband-dryman, etc.

Certainly, no one can blame agriculture for trying to skim the milk and get the cream. College people must be had for scientific positions. And if agriculture seeks the best—well, agriculture is smart and helping the taxpayer to boot.

THIS column, recently, expatiated upon the hidden talent in the Government, mentioning several examples. And in the meanwhile we seize upon another, Joe Bly, of the Interior Department, an actor of the old school.

JOE BLY

We were interested because Mr. Bly has the popular conception of an actor's face; were impressed when told of all the stock companies that were at one time or another indebted to Mr. Bly for his services.

He starred recently in "Trelawney of the Wells," I. D. R. A. Dramatic Club production and has become the mainstay of amateur theatricals over his way. He goes in heavily for character roles, and concerning the tribulations of the man who essays these parts, Mr. Bly has to say:

"Yes, the psychology of character impersonation is, indeed, diverting. Diverting it most certainly is to be somebody else than yourself if even for a split second in some scene where you have eluded yourself and have entered the character with your whole mind and body.

"Which of the characters I have done do I like the best? . . . Well, to tell the truth, no character man is ever quite satisfied with the job he does in any character, as only he himself really knows how far his physical meagerness missed the mark his spiritual perception had set."

Mr. Bly, we affirm, might be used to high advantage in amateur theatricals generally in Washington.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart

The announcement concerning a United States 6-cent bicolored air mail stamp, "imperforate horizontally," and quoting a sheet of 50, including a complete set of positions and ten pairs, for $2,500, is truly "sensational." The sheet of 50 stamps is worth exactly $3. Endeavors to create a false price as well as a "racket" cannot in any sense of the word be called ethical philately.

W. M. STUART.

Undoubtedly, the sheets of stamps were sent to the postoffice in question as usual, but human hands and eyes are apt to make mistakes and the imperfections escaped some unwatchful eye. But this is not an "invert" nor is it worth while to insist that such an "error" is worth more than face. The story behind the sale should be investigated and the Postoffice Department undoubtedly insist that such errors be reduced to a minimum. From what has been learned, evidently more than one sheet was shown. The question now at hand is how were they sold? Postal officials declare that regulations prohibit the possibility of such sales as above.

There are collectors who purchase all errors, "legitimate" or otherwise. This phase of collecting may be interesting to many, but it seems entirely wrong to create a false price on an item few would ever have an opportunity to acquire. Postal officials are supposed to protect those who buy stamps and perfectly legitimate errors are often discovered, but under the circumstances it seems postal authorities are called upon to explain how so many sheets happened to be sold after the first few sheets were discovered. Philately has a right to ask for the particulars in this case.

Stamps

The Postoffice Department has nothing official to give out in regard to transatlantic air mail service. For months there have been discussions regarding such a mail service with the British government and postal officials, and the recent announcement that the French government has granted the United States a permit for authority to operate a transatlantic air mail service simply means that negotiations are being carried on. Further than this nothing has been done.

Postoffice officials scout upon the announcements that service is in such a state that covers "may soon be carried" and that orders should be placed for first-day cancellations. Such reports and rumors simply cause the Postoffice Department useless correspondence for there is not one single report as regards dates on any transatlantic air mail route. When the service is finally worked out due notice will be made, postal officials say.

The Postoffice Department has announced that the total sales of the endwise coil and booklet stamps of the new regular series of 1938, amounted to $16,204,53. There were 196,328 covers canceled on January 27, 1939, when these coils and booklet stamps went on sale first-day in Washington. The denominations issued were: Endwise coils 1-cent, 1½-cent, 2-cent and 3-cent; stamp books 1-cent, 2-cent and 3-cent.

The sales at the Philatelic Agency during month of January, 1939, amounted to $86,350.33.

Costa Rica, through the director general of posts, reports that there are no facilities in the department of posts for handling orders for stamps received from persons outside of Costa Rica.

China's "Provisional Government of the Chinese Republic" at Peiping on December 14, 1938, prepared a memorial cancelation commemorating the first anniversary of the establishment of the new regime.

France issued on December 25, 1938, a semipostal variety, 90-c plus 25-c, violet, showing a blind man before a radio. The surtax is for radios for the blind. The stamp was designed by J. Piel, engraver.

Cuba will issue a set of stamps in commemoration of the United States Constitution. Complete details are lacking but it is stated that the regular postage issue will be 1-cent, 2-cent, 5-cent and 10-cent values and 5-cent and 10-cent for air mails.

Finland's Red Cross stamp was issued on January 1, 1939, 400,000 sets being issued. The design on the four stamps is the same, showing the battlefield of Solferino. The values: 1m plus 1p; 1m. 50p plus 15p; 2m plus 20p and 3m.50p plus 35p.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met at the Thomson Community Center on Tuesday evening. The feature of the session was an address by Perry W. Fuller, of Baltimore, who took the place as speaker of Sol Glass, president of the Baltimore Philatelic Society, who was unable to attend.

Mr. Fuller spoke on stamp collecting and exhibited scores of pages of both foreign, United States and poster stamps and labels. Many of the pages were highly illuminated. The speaker told many incidents in his long years of collecting and he demonstrated what was being done in the field of repairing and unloading stamps of no value after "touching the bad spots," to unsuspected collectors. He advised a sharp check upon all stamps when in doubt as to their genuiness.

He showed scores of air mail labels and made the statement that these were fast becoming a valuable collectable item and suggested that those who collect now will be fortunate later, for the market value was even now on the upward grade for all such labels, etc.

President C. Hercus Just and Svend Yort both urged all to enter exhibits for the National Museum exhibition in March not later than February 15. A short auction followed, with P. D. Weeks officiating.

On Tuesday the regular auction sale will be held, and there will be an exhibition. A delegation from the recently organized Agricultural Department Stamp Club is scheduled to visit the club, and the public in general is also asked to attend.

Superintendent R. E. Fellers, of the division of stamps, was the chief speaker at the banquet of the North Shore Philatelic Society in Chicago on Sunday evening, January 29.

Philatelic Agency sales list No. 133, under date of January 21, 1939, has been issued giving notations of the coils and booklet stamps placed on sale on January 20 and January 27. There have been no recent withdrawals and on February 18 the new 3-cent Golden Gate Exposition stamp will go on the list.

The 1939 annual exhibition of the Associated Stamp Clubs of Southeastern Pennsylvania and Delaware will be held at Hotel Philadelphia, Thirty-ninth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, September 27 to October 1. Raymond R. Geiger is secretary of the exhibition committee, the general chairman being Jacob Bressler, of the Evening Ledger Stamp Club.

The special issue of the 3-cent stamp commemorating the Golden Gate International Exposition will be placed on first-day sale at San Francisco February 18. The chief design is a reproduction of the tower of the Sun Building at the exposition. The stamp will be the size of the current special delivery, arranged vertically, and will be printed by rotary press.

All desiring first-day covers for first-day cancellations may send covers not to exceed ten to the postmaster at San Francisco. Plate number requests will not be honored, or requests for unusual arrangements.

The stamp will be placed on sale at the Philatelic Agency February 20.

Postmaster General James A. Farley says that the postal earnings for Deceber, 1938, amounted to $87,889,911, this being equal to the postal receipts for the entire fiscal year of 1898.

The Frederick, Md., Stamp and Coin Club is planning an open house and exhibition March 31 and April 1, with a precancel round-up on the latter date.

The Philippine Philatelic Agency is now located in the new offices of the resident commissioner of the Philippines, at 2362 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

The annual exhibition of the Woodridge Stamp Club will open tomorrow evening at the Woodridge Library, 2206 Rhode Island avenue northeast, and continue through the week. Judges of the exhibit will be M. O. Cooper, C. Hercus Just and Rolston Lyon. Awards will be announced at the meeting of the club on February 13.

with its new annex now ready for occupancy, surpasses in size of collection any other library in the world. First interior photos of the new addition were obtained when members of the legislative sub-committee of the House Appropriations Committee made an inspection of the ultra-modern structure recently completed at a cost of more than $8,226,000.

INTERTYPE MACHINES USED IN PREPARING CARDS.

Catalogue cards are printed in many languages. Grouped about the machine above, which has type faces in English and Greek, are Martin A. Roberts, chief assistant librarian; William Bond, superintendent; Representative Joachim Fernandez, and Representative Louis C. Rabaut, chairman of the committee, at the key board. George Harvey at the right.

Featured in this room, that will be available for the reading public, are spacious desks with cushioned chairs that slide silently. Lamps are equipped with three intensities of light and may be operated by the reader. Herbert Putnam, librarian, center of group at right.

William Bond, superintendent of the building, who designed the book carrier system, is shown holding one of the large pouches. They travel at a speed of 25 feet per second and upon arrival are cushioned by a bank of air that prevents damage. By a simple operation of a dial that resets itself, pouches may be dispatched to any floor. There are 24 decks in the new building, each with a capacity of 400,000 books.

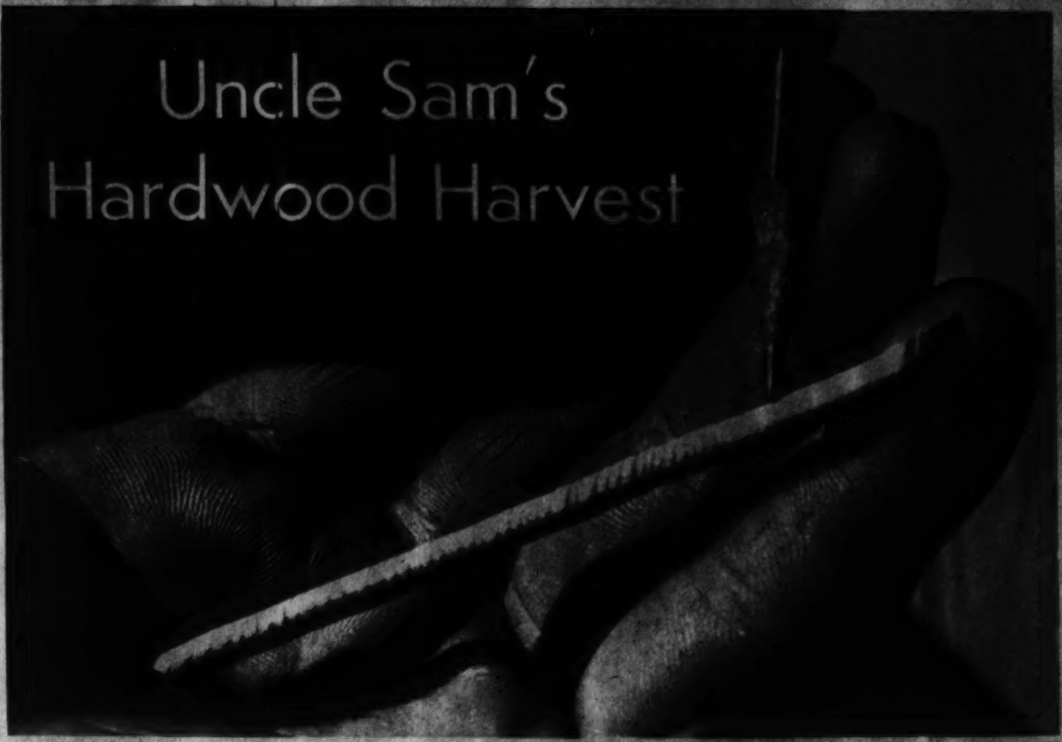
Uncle Sam's Hardwood Harvest



DURING the past year more than 15,000,000 feet of lumber was harvested from the Jefferson and George Washington National Forests that extend through Virginia and a section of West Virginia. Under methods of preservation and reforestation the maximum harvest will not be ready until the year 2019. In much the same manner as a farmer cares for his annual crop of cotton, the U. S. Forest Service has been carrying on an extensive program of cultivation of timber for a number of years. Rangers go into the wooded areas taking sample cores from trees with an increment bore as shown above. Reading the core at left, the annual rings reveal that in the past 40 years (right end of core) the tree has grown but 1 inch and has reached maturity some time ago. Now ripe for cutting, the ranger blazes the tree and with one blow of the opposite end of his axe stamps a U. S. imprint. Local operators make competitive bids when buying standing timber so marked.

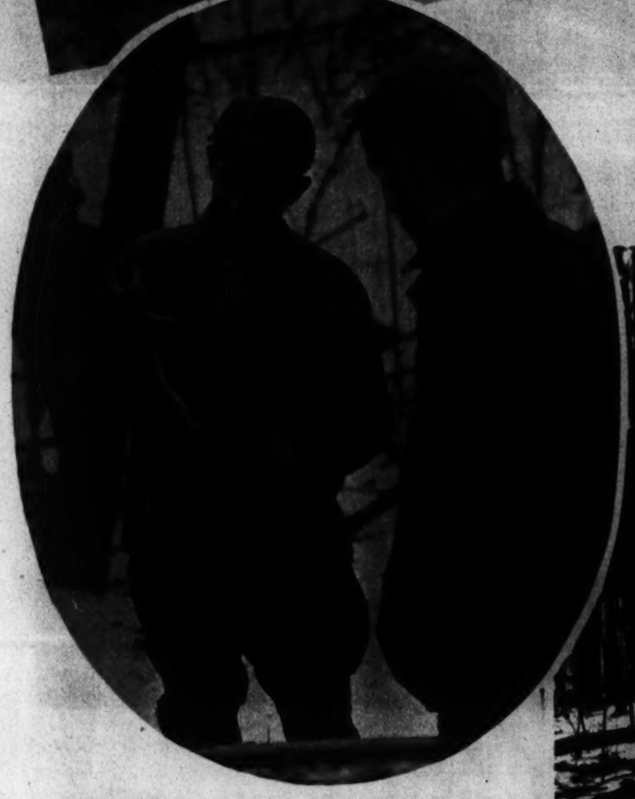
SAWING, SIGHTING AND FALLING.

Trees are stamped below and above where they are to be cut, thus enabling the ranger to check both the log and the stump at a later time. During the past year more than 15,000,000 board feet of saw timber was taken from both forests. Bark from hemlock and chestnut oak, which is used in making tannic acid, amounted to 141 tons. Photographs shown here were made in the Shenanddah Valley near Edinburg, Va., where the majority of hardwood cut is chestnut oak, with 60 per cent of all manufactured lumber being used locally. Men at left are sawing through after which axeman (above) sights for the drop. After he makes the final cut the cry of TIMBER! TIMBER! echoes through the woods as the tree falls.



STUNNED BY THE FALL.

Wild life flourishes more abundantly in the cultivated forests. The squirrel, shown above, was hibernating in the fallen tree and suffered shock when the big oak tumbled. Friendly woodsmen gave him a brisk massage and he scampered off to a taller tree.

OFF TO THE MILL.

The tree is bucked (cut) into desired lengths and nosed for skidding to the mill. Ranger at left scales the cuts to determine the number of board feet with which the operator will be charged. Portable mills such as that at left move through the forests and are known as "coffee pots" or "woodpeckers," according to the locality. Average time spent on one location is four to six weeks.

Our Younger Artists

IN the Junior High Schools of Washington children learn that art is a part of everyday living rather than an experience reserved for the talented few. Believing that every student has the right to experience the joy of manipulating art materials, of creating and expressing his own ideas, opportunities for expression in a variety of attractive media give a child a chance to learn the basic principles of design underlying all forms of art. In this method of teaching, pupils become familiar with some of the best examples of architecture, sculpture and printing in the art heritage of the race. The gifted child is given a chance to grow in proportion to his capacity. Accompanying photographs were made during a routine day at Eliot Junior High School with the co-operation of Miss Clare Fontanini, who graduated from the College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn., and who like other teachers in the public schools has extended her studies with summer courses at Columbia University, Woodstock, N. Y., and in Europe.

ENCOURAGEMENT.
Miss Fontanini is always on hand to guide her young artists. She is shown assisting Norma Fleming and Lida Miller who are carving in soap. The chips will be used for hand washing before lunch.

John Fowler is scratching a design on celluloid while his classmates use a clothes ringer of ancient vintage to pull a print. Aubrey King (left) is engaged in making a water color drawing.

CLAY MODELING.
One of the favorite activities. This model will be cast in plaster and process of mould making and plaster reproduction will be learned. MURALS MADE BY STUDENTS DECORATE CAFETERIA.
Typical of the type of work done by the children are a number of murals, four by eight feet, which have been framed and placed in the school cafeteria. Two of the students who enjoyed their first art study at Eliot have been awarded scholarships since graduating from high school. One attends Syracuse University and another is at Yale. Three of the first prize awards in the District Dental poster contest have been won by Eliot
